Introduction

In the darkest days of World War II John Curtin rose to become Australia’s fourteenth prime minister. He led his country through extremely difficult times, which took a toll on his personal health. Today he is regarded as one of Australia’s most successful leaders and a great hero.

John Curtin

John Curtin, the son of working-class Irish immigrants, was born in 1885 in Victoria. He grew up in an era of increasing social unrest, when workers were beginning to assert their rights to decent pay and working conditions. His background, with its poverty and struggle, and the influence of socialists like Tom Mann and Frank Anstey led to Curtin’s involvement in the Labour Movement and politics.

Curtin became prime minister on 7 October 1941 at a time when Australia had deployed most of its trained troops to defend Britain. On 7 December 1941 the Japanese attacked the American base at Pearl Harbor and war began in the Asia-Pacific area. As prime minister, Curtin then faced what no other Australian prime minister before or since has faced – enemy attacks on the Australian mainland and the possibility of invasion.

Curtin’s subsequent actions changed the foreign policy of Australia and signalled a fundamental shift in the way Australians regarded themselves and their country’s place in the world. The traditional allegiance of Australians to the British Empire shifted in the face of the practicalities of alliance with, and reliance upon, the United States in their battle for survival against the Japanese.

Curtin was not only a great wartime leader – he also formulated policies for Australia’s postwar reconstruction, including planning for full employment, assisted immigration and improvements in social security. Under his leadership, the Australian Parliament passed landmark legislation, including an Act which established a uniform taxation scheme and removed the power of the states to collect income tax. His government also ratified British legislation establishing the independence of Dominion parliaments.

Curtin died in office on 5 July 1945, six weeks before the Japanese surrender and the return of peace and security to Australia.
Elsie Curtin

Elsie Curtin, wife of Prime Minister John Curtin, was the daughter of Abraham Needham, a Tasmanian union official and political associate of Curtin.

Elsie was a great support to Curtin, raising their children and handling the family’s other domestic affairs. She was a lifelong champion of the Labor cause. In addition to assisting her husband with local electorate and electoral matters, especially when he was absent in Canberra, she played a very active role in the Labor Women’s Organisation, becoming a life member of its Fremantle branch and serving as its state president between 1944 and 1946.

Over the years Elsie was involved in a variety of community activities, including serving on the Married Women’s Court and acting as a visitor to Fremantle Prison. She was awarded life membership of a number of organisations, including the Perth Branch of the Association of Civilian Widows, the Royal Association of Justices and the Women’s Justice Association. In 1970 she was made a Commander of the British Empire for ‘services to the community’ and for ‘encouragement’ to her husband during the years of World War II. She died on 24 June 1975 and is buried beside her husband in Karrakatta Cemetery.

A timeline of their lives appears at Appendix 1.

National Archives of Australia

The National Archives of Australia preserves and cares for a diverse archival collection documenting the relationship between the Australian Government and the Australian people – a rich resource for the study of Australian history, society and people.

The collection spans almost 200 years of Australian history. Its main focus is material documenting Australian government activities since Federation in 1901. The Archives has significant holdings of nineteenth-century records about functions transferred by the colonies to the Australian Government at the time of Federation and subsequently.

Access to the National Archives’ collection is provided free of charge in public reading rooms located in each capital city. Researchers are assisted by specialist Archives reference staff and are provided with reference tools to help them identify and use the records in the collection. These reference tools include the RecordSearch and PhotoSearch databases, guides, publications and Fact Sheets. Researchers unable to visit a reading room may seek information and help by telephone, mail, facsimile or email.

The National Archives’ website (www.naa.gov.au) provides more information about the Archives, its collection and the services it offers. A visit to the site will help you determine whether the Archives holds records relevant to your research.

John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library

The John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library (JCPML), located at the Curtin University of Technology in Perth, Western Australia, was established to honour Prime Minister John Curtin, whose inspirational leadership and political courage unified Australia during the darkest days of World War II.
The JCPML collection contains records about John Curtin and his family, including books, ephemera, objects, photographs, audio-visual material, and published and unpublished official records. A number of Curtin-related themes are also supported by the JCPML research collection, including Australia’s relationship with the United States of America, foreign policy, postwar reconstruction, refugees and immigration, international trade and tariffs, the role of prime ministerial wives, and how government and the public service conducts itself.

The JCPML website (john.curtin.edu.au) provides researchers, teachers, students and members of the public with information about John Curtin and records held in the JCPML and in the collections of other archival institutions.

About this guide

This guide aims to make it easier for researchers to access records relating to John and Elsie Curtin in the National Archives, the JCPML and other collections. It is a companion publication to the National Archives’ Australia’s Prime Ministers website (primeministers.naa.gov.au).

The guide contains:

- basic biographical information about John and Elsie Curtin;
- descriptions of records created by John Curtin, including official records, correspondence and private papers; and records about him including photographs, memorabilia, oral histories, and films and other audiovisual material; and
- descriptions of records of, or about, Elsie Curtin.

This guide is comprehensive, but because the collection of the National Archives alone runs to an estimated 250 kilometres of records, only a proportion of records of likely interest to readers could be located and identified. Accordingly, the search has targeted the most significant sources of relevant material and is focused on public collections in Australia. Records held by the National Archives are listed first, followed by those held by the JCPML and then by those in other national collections, and finally by those held overseas.

Record descriptions

National Archives’ records on John Curtin have been grouped under relevant headings, and within each section the descriptions of series and items are then organised chronologically as far as possible. The records on Elsie Curtin are not grouped under headings but are arranged chronologically as far as possible. Each entry in the guide describes a group of records maintained together as a series. A series consists of items, which are often individual files (sometimes volumes, sets of cards, photographs, etc), received into custody by the National Archives from a creating agency or person. Series usually consist of many items, but occasionally they may consist of just a few items or even a single item.

The description for each series gives its content and function. The entry concludes with a list of items selected from the series. In many instances, particular series have been found to contain material relevant to several sections and these have been included in each section as appropriate. The full description of each series is given only on its first appearance. As a general rule, this guide identifies rather than analyses the records. Researchers should make their own assessment of the value of information in an item.

Records on John Curtin from the John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library are grouped under relevant headings and within each section series descriptions are arranged alphabetically by the creating agency or person. A similar approach is adopted for records held in other libraries and archives. These collections are arranged by location and then alphabetically by manuscript collection or chronologically, depending on the material.

1. This information gives the series title and the date range of the records that make up the series. The series number is shown on the upper right-hand side.

2. This shows the person or government agency that created the series. It also shows the date range during which each series was created or recorded. This date range does not necessarily correspond to the contents date range of the records, which appears in the series title. The CP (Commonwealth person) and CA (Commonwealth agency) number are unique identifiers allocated by the Archives to each person or agency. These numbers can be used to retrieve more information about the person or agency, and the records they created, from the Archives’ online database, RecordSearch.

3. This shows the total volume of records in the series. The office of the National Archives at which they are held is shown in brackets. If copies of records are held in other locations, this is indicated here.

4. This is a brief description of the series.

5. This shows the title given to the item by the person or agency that created it. The dates of the earliest and latest document on the file are shown. The item’s identifying number appears on the lower right-hand side of the description. This number must be quoted when requesting a copy of the record or access to it.

6. This describes the main contents of an item. Note that it does not describe every document on the file.

1. Provides information about the creator of the records ('Curtin Family'), the series title ('Personal correspondence') and the date range of the records that make up the series. The series identifier is shown on the upper right-hand side. Please note that some JCPML series and item titles have been edited in this guide for the sake of brevity.

2. Quantity information indicates the extent of the records in the series.

3. This is a brief description of the series.

4. Provides the title and date (or date range) of files or items in the series. The file or item identifier appears on the lower right-hand side. This identifier must be quoted when requesting a copy of the record or access to it.

5. This provides a brief description of the file or item.

Access to the records in the National Archives

Many series described in this guide are listed in RecordSearch, the National Archives’ online catalogue, which is available in the reading rooms of all offices of the Archives, at the Australian War Memorial and on the Archives’ website (www.naa.gov.au). Indexes and inventories, available in reading rooms, may also be useful. Reference staff can assist researchers to use these lists.

Access to archival records is governed by the Archives Act 1983, which gives a right of access to most Commonwealth government records that are over 30 years old. Records over 30 years old are said to be in the open period. In rare instances, the government may release records less than 30 years old, under the accelerated release provisions of the Archives Act.

Some records are exempt from these access provisions (eg court records, some parliamentary records and some records of governors-general). Researchers are able to access all other open period records, including those held by agencies, unless those records contain information that falls into certain categories, called ‘exemption categories’, which are defined in section 33 of the Act. There are 15 exemption categories and information that falls within them is said to be ‘exempt information’. Before the Archives releases records for public access, it examines them to ensure that they do not contain exempt information (see Fact Sheet 46).
Most records (97.5%) are wholly released for public access while 2% are released with some exempt information deleted. Only 0.5% of records are wholly withheld because they consist entirely of exempt information. Most exempt information is withheld to protect personal privacy, but defence, security and intelligence sensitivities are the next most common reasons for exemption.

Officers of the Archives are delegated under the Act to examine records and make decisions about whether they can be released. This is done in consultation with departments and agencies. Examination of records may often take a day or less, but if they require referral to agencies or overseas, it may take weeks or months. The Archives informs its clients of delays in this process.

If a researcher applies to see a record that is exempt from public access, the Archives will provide a written statement of reasons identifying the exempt information, the exemption category that applies and why it applies. Details of all records containing exempt information are available on RecordSearch. The access status will show OPEN, OPEN WITH EXCEPTION, WITHHELD PENDING AGENCY ADVICE OR CLOSED, while the reason for restriction will show the category or categories under which the information is exempted.

A researcher may appeal against an exemption and the Archives will review its decision, but if it is confirmed, the researcher may then appeal to the independent Administrative Appeals Tribunal (see Fact Sheet 12). There is no charge for obtaining access or for applying to the Archives to review its decision, but an application fee applies for appeals to the Administrative Appeals Tribunal.

Regardless of the type of research they undertake at the National Archives, researchers will only be able to examine open period records (ie 30 years of age or older) that do not contain sensitive information or those released under the accelerated release provisions of the Archives Act.

Control records in the National Archives

Control records are created and maintained by a recordkeeping agency to help identify and retrieve records in a specific series. Agency control records include such registry tools as file registers, movement registers, subject indexes and name indexes. In this guide, control records are listed as the ‘control series’ of a series.

Digitised copies of records

Digitised copies of some National Archives records are available through the Australia’s Prime Ministers website at primeministers.naa.gov.au and are available for viewing on RecordSearch. Most of the JCPML records are available online through ERA (dtl.lis.curtin.edu.au).

Citing the records

The correct citation of archival records in the National Archives, the JCPML and in other collections is important both when requesting the records and when referring to them in written or published works. Using proper citations will not only help staff to locate records more readily, but will also help other researchers to find that material.

The correct form of citation for records held by the National Archives of Australia is expressed as follows: the name National Archives of Australia followed by a colon, the series number followed by a comma, and then the item number. An example is:

National Archives of Australia: A981, INT 22

The name National Archives of Australia may be abbreviated to ‘NAA’ provided the full name has been used in the first citation. National Archives Fact Sheet 7 provides further information on citing the records and can be located on the website (www.naa.gov.au/publications, and follow links).

The correct citation for records held by the JCPML is ‘John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library. Collection title. File or item title. File or item ID’. For example:

The name John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library may be abbreviated to ‘JCPML’ provided the full name is identified in the first citation. Further information and examples are provided on the JCPML website (john.curtin.edu.au/era/copyright.html). Please note that in this guide the citation of JCPML records has been abbreviated for reasons of brevity. In this guide, for example, the above item will appear as ‘Letter from John Curtin to Elsie Needham, 24 August 1914’ plus the item number (see also p. 11).

For other archives and libraries, the name of the institution should be provided, followed by the reference or call number of the collection. An example is:

National Library of Australia: MS 4744

Locating additional information

Additional information on the papers of John Curtin can be located by searching on the National Archives’ RecordSearch database, the JCPML ERA and the databases of other institutions. Further information on records relating to John Curtin can also be found through the Australia’s Prime Ministers website (primeministers.naa.gov.au). This website has research maps that lead researchers into the collections of a number of archives, both within Australia and overseas.

State archives also hold records relating to service in state legislatures and interaction between prime ministers and state premiers. Appendix 2 is a ‘Who’s who’ of key players in the Curtin story, while further reading on John Curtin can be found in Appendix 3. Addresses of the National Archives’ reading rooms are in Appendix 4 and addresses of other archival institutions holding material on or about John Curtin are in Appendix 5.
John Curtin, the only Australian Prime Minister to represent a Western Australian seat in the House of Representatives, led his country during the most critical phase of World War II. However, like his United States (US) counterpart, Franklin Roosevelt, Curtin did not live to see the final victory. At 4 am on 5 July 1945, in The Lodge, the prime minister’s residence in Canberra, he became only the second Australian Prime Minister to die in office, barely six weeks before the Japanese capitulation was announced on 15 August.

In the words of his most recent biographer, John Curtin ‘continues to be regarded with admiration and affection across the political divide’. Many people would agree with the assessment of his immediate predecessor as Prime Minister, Arthur Fadden, that Curtin was ‘one of the greatest Australians ever’. This is all the more remarkable given his personal and political problems during and after World War I (the ‘Great War’) and the internal difficulties that plagued the Australian Labor Party (ALP) when he first became its national parliamentary leader in 1935. It is testimony to the way Curtin met the challenge of leading his country that between 1940 and 1943 he converted a slim majority of 641 votes after preferences in his seat of Fremantle to an absolute majority of nearly 23 000.

In the epilogue to his two-volume work, The Government and the People 1942–1945, which was part of the official history of Australia during the war, Sir Paul Hasluck, who came from the opposite side of the political fence, summed up Curtin’s contribution:

Curtin did not fight hard to become Prime Minister and showed some reticence about assuming office. Having come to the heavy responsibilities and finding them greatly increased by a new turn in the war that was already being waged, he grew in wisdom, character and strength with the added burdens that were laid on him. His own dedication was complete. He held back nothing from his service to the nation [and]...he had lived out his own text: ‘I ask every Australian, man and woman, to go about their allotted task with full vigour and courage...We shall hold this country and keep it as a citadel for the British-speaking race and as a place where civilization will persist’.
Early life, 1885–1914

John Joseph Ambrose Curtin was born in Creswick, Victoria on 8 January 1885, the eldest son of John Curtin (born 1853) and Catherine Bourke (born 1856), Irish immigrants who had married at St Patrick’s Cathedral in Melbourne in June 1883. When Curtin was only five years old his father was forced through ill health to resign from the police force and seek employment as a publican. For the next eight years the family lived in increasingly impoverished circumstances, first in Melbourne and then in a succession of country towns before returning to Melbourne where Curtin’s mother assumed the main burden of supporting her husband and four children. Curtin himself left school at thirteen and worked in a series of jobs before securing longer-term employment with the Titan Manufacturing Company in 1903.

Having left the Catholic Church, and after a short spell with the Salvation Army, Curtin turned to rationalism and then to socialism under the influence of Frank Anstey, a member of the Victorian Legislative Assembly and later the Member of the House of Representatives (MHR) for the Victorian electorate of Bourke, who was described as a ‘messianic figure whose political language was studded with religious allusions’.

Although an active ALP member, Curtin also joined the more radical Victorian Socialist Party (VSP), which had been established by the British trade union leader Tom Mann in 1906. In the socialist movement Curtin found both political ideals and an important medium for personal and social relationships. After Mann returned to the United Kingdom (UK), where he later became a leading light in the British Communist Party, Curtin served as the Secretary of the VSP. In 1911 he left both this position and his job with the Titan Manufacturing Company to become the Secretary of the Victorian Timber Workers Union.

Soon after, in his union capacity, he met his future wife, Elsie Needham, daughter of Abraham Needham, a prominent Australian radical activist who had migrated to Tasmania after a spell in South Africa. Curtin’s visit to Hobart in 1912 was part of his strategy to unite the timber workers into an Australia-wide federation, and Needham, at that stage a parliamentary candidate, was one of six leading members of the local Labour Movement nominated as a ‘provisional committee of advice’ on how to reorder the affairs of the local union.

World War I and conscription, 1914–17

The outbreak of the war in 1914 found Curtin seeking to have the Labour Movement commit itself to measures designed to prevent war. However, political necessity in a federal election year in which Curtin contested a Victorian seat for the ALP swept aside the peace resolutions he had achieved with the Victorian Trades Hall Council.

Curtin was also finding it increasingly difficult to persuade the timber workers to respond to the socialist causes espoused in his articles in the union’s journal and in November 1915 he resigned as union secretary. This decision seems to have arisen not only from his frustration with the timber workers’ lack of commitment to the wider ideals of working class advancement, but probably also as a consequence of problems in dealing with issues of declining union membership and of embezzlement within the union office.
Despite this growing disillusionment he ‘operated with the energy of a tornado,’ working first for the Australian Workers’ Union (AWU) in the Riverina district and then for the Trades Union Anti-Conscription Committee. However, in mid-1916 he had to seek admission to hospital to deal with his growing drinking problem. Backed by the support of friends, he returned to the fray and celebrated the defeat of the first conscription referendum in October. In December that year he was jailed for failing to respond to a call-up, only to be released a few days later. Even as Prime Minister William Morris (‘Billy’) Hughes was expelled from the ALP and formed a new Nationalist Ministry, Curtin found personal salvation through the influence of friends and colleagues with his appointment as editor of the Westralian Worker, a paper then owned by the AWU in Western Australia.

Editor of the Westralian Worker, 1917–28

Curtin arrived in Perth at the beginning of 1917 with the task of reversing the previous editorial policy of the Westralian Worker and voicing strong opposition to Hughes and his continuing efforts to introduce conscription. In his new position Curtin now had the means to marry Elsie, who had followed him to the west, and the ceremony took place in a private home in April 1917. Over the next few years the couple had two children, Elsie and John, and in 1923 moved into their own redbrick home in the seaside suburb of Cottesloe.

As editor, and with his reputation as a speaker and socialist advocate from the east, Curtin soon became a leading figure in the Labour Movement in the west. He developed a close collaboration with Philip Collier, another fervent anti-conscriptionist who had become the leader of the Western Australian Parliamentary Labor Party in 1917 after the defection of former Premier ‘Happy Jack’ Scaddan to the pro-conscriptionists. As he and Collier celebrated the defeat of the second conscription referendum in December that year, Curtin was fined for making a statement ‘likely to cause disaffection to His Majesty’ when he urged ‘rebellion’ on the crowd if conscription were forced upon them.'
Despite his more settled lifestyle in the west, Curtin’s personal problems did not disappear overnight. He had to cope first with the death of his father early in March 1919 and then, seven weeks later, with the loss through influenza of his close friend Frank Hyett. Labor had performed poorly in both state and federal elections in WA in 1917, and in December 1919, at a time when he was suffering from neurasthenia, Curtin reluctantly contested the federal seat of Perth and was soundly defeated. In the aftermath he was unable to return to full-time work for several months. Without the assistance of his in-laws, who had come to live with the family towards the middle of 1919, he would have been hard pressed to meet both his editorial and family responsibilities.

For a time Curtin had been optimistic that the end of the war would pave the way for successful socialist revolutions, but by 1922 the tenor of his editorials in the Westralian Worker indicated that he had come to accept that parliamentary action by social democratic parties, including the ALP, “was the only practical means of social change.” In editorials written just before and after the State Labor Congress, Curtin told his readers, ‘Congress assembles with the tide of reaction almost at the flood’ and that the procedure for ‘Labor’s Social Revolution was to be “progressively constructive and reconstructive”’. 9

As Curtin went through this conversion from revolutionary socialism to parliamentary gradualism, he lost one of those who had urged him to keep faith with the cause: his father-in-law, Abraham Needham, died from a heart attack on 18 August 1922.

In the meantime, however, Curtin’s journalist achievements at the paper were ‘widely recognized, outside as well as inside the Labour Movement’. 11 In addition to his ‘forceful and at times emotive’ editorials in the paper, much of the content on the other pages came from Curtin’s pen. He also held the post of president of the Western Australian district of the Australian Journalists’ Association (AJA) from 1920 to 1925. In this capacity he put a great deal of energy into seeking ‘to improve its members’ education as well as their wages and working conditions’. In association with a number of academics at the University of Western Australia, he arranged lecture programs without fees and formal examinations as well as informal discussions at nearby cafes. While trying to foster links between the AJA and the wider trade union movement, he also developed good working relationships with the main newspaper proprietors in Perth. 12

In 1924, the same year as Labor under Collier regained the Western Australian Treasury benches, Curtin was appointed by the Federal Bruce–Page Nationalist–Country Party coalition Government to represent the Labour Movement at the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Conference in Geneva. His experiences on his first overseas trip heightened his interest in the activities and potential of the League of Nations. 13 However, they also served to confirm his view that the opportunity to overthrow capitalism by revolutionary means had passed.

Back in Western Australia in 1925, he found himself declared ‘black’ by the communist-led Seamen’s Union when he backed the Collier Government’s use of police on the waterfront to allow passengers through the union’s picket line. 14 He failed again at his third attempt to enter Federal Parliament at the 1925 election – this time for the seat of Fremantle – and continued his editorial work as well as lecturing to journalists at the University of Western Australia. He also served on the federal Royal Commission on Child Endowment or Family Allowances, for which he was one of two signatories to a minority report rejecting the majority finding to maintain the status quo.
In November 1928 political success finally came his way when he was elected MHR for Fremantle and took his seat on the Opposition benches behind incumbent leader James (‘Jim’) Scullin. In his last editorial for the Westralian Worker before leaving Perth, Curtin sounded his clarion call to:

…the men who have control of the political and industrial machinery of Labor – with the leaders of the workers’ party…They must not fail us. A vast – almost heart-breaking – responsibility rests on them.”

Ups and downs, 1928–35

Curtin spent nearly a year on the Opposition backbenches before the Bruce–Page Government was forced to the polls. Labor regained power in the election for the House of Representatives held in October 1929, though it was still in a hopeless minority in the Senate. Somewhat surprisingly, Curtin was overlooked for the one Western Australian position in the Scullin Ministry. The impact of the Great Depression ultimately destroyed the Scullin Government following a landslide United Australia Party (UAP) win in the federal election in December 1931, and sent Curtin back into the political wilderness along with another future Prime Minister, Ben Chifley. This experience was especially disillusioning for Curtin, and he was critical of his own government for compromising with its opponents and accepting the cost-cutting implicit in the ‘Premiers’ Plan’ instead of calling a fresh election to secure a mandate for its own radical credit creation policies. His later commitment to full employment policies and banking reform were a direct consequence of the bitter experiences of the Scullin Government years.

Back in the west Curtin worked as a freelance sports journalist for the Westralian Worker. He wrote articles for the ALP (including paid articles for Western Australian newspapers) from an office in Trades Hall until 1933 when Collier, back as Premier after three years in opposition, employed him to write the Western Australian Government’s submission to the newly formed Commonwealth Grants Commission.

Despite suggestions he should return to Victoria to contest the federal seat being vacated by Frank Anstey, his long-standing colleague and mentor, Curtin stood again for Fremantle in 1934. He won Fremantle narrowly in an election in which Labor regained only a handful of the seats it had lost in 1931, while the breakaway Lang Labor forces in New South Wales won five additional seats, giving them a total of nine federal seats. Amid ever-increasing emphasis on issues of national security, Curtin was elected to the front bench and, less than a year later, when Scullin stood down in September 1935 he won the federal parliamentary leadership by one vote from Scullin’s deputy, Queenslander Frank Forde.

Among the reasons for Curtin’s success, over and above his pledge to abstain from alcohol, were his union background and impeccable loyalty to ALP principles during the crisis years of the Great War and the Great Depression. In addition, he had the advantage of living in Western Australia, a state where the ALP had been in opposition throughout the worst years of the Depression, far removed from the feuds bedevilling the party in the east.”
Leader of the Opposition, 1935–41

Curtin’s most immediate task as leader was to restore Labor unity and in the process sideline the Lang Labor forces in New South Wales, a group to which he had been implacably opposed from the outset. In February 1936, following a unity conference in New South Wales, he succeeded in securing the return of the Lang Labor members to the Federal Caucus of the ALP, though problems with the Lang Labor group recurred on and off again until as late as 1941.

On the foreign policy front Curtin had to steer a course between widely divergent views within his own party – for example, during the Spanish Civil War, the ALP Left urged support for the incumbent Spanish Government while other Labor factions, including the party’s Catholic wing, totally repudiated such an approach. On this, and on the issue of supporting sanctions against Italy over its invasion of Abyssinia, Curtin essentially sought to avoid adopting a definite policy.17

In Parliament he advocated a defence policy of self-reliance with a build-up particularly of the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF). However, he could not avoid the charge of isolationism at the 1937 federal election, at which the Lyons Government was returned comfortably to power, although Labor did make gains in the Senate. Soon afterwards both Government and Opposition leaders alike were relieved when war seemed to have been avoided with the Munich Agreement of September 1938. Curtin also was far from enthusiastic about the provocation to Japan offered by the Port Kembla waterside workers when, at the end of 1938, they refused to load pig-iron for export to Japan.18

Isolationism was swept aside by the rapid course of events in 1939. In May that year Curtin managed to dissuade the Australian Council of Trade Unions from boycotting a manpower survey. When war broke out in September 1939 he backed Australian participation while opposing the introduction of compulsory military training. He also warned against leaving Australia undefended with the dispatch of a voluntary expeditionary force to the European front, a move that Prime Minister Robert Menzies eventually confirmed on 28 November 1939.

However, Menzies, who had won the UAP leadership in May 1939 following the death of Prime Minister Joseph Lyons, found it difficult to maintain electoral support during the period of the ‘Phony War’. At the same time, despite fresh problems with Lang Labor, which had opposed a New South Wales’ ALP conference motion condemning the possibility of war against Russia, Curtin managed to hold the party together. Following the federal election of September 1940 the Menzies Government was in power only with the support of two Victorian independents, Arthur Coles and Alex Wilson. Ironically, Curtin himself in Fremantle faced what seemed certain defeat early in the count until he was saved by late postal votes from servicemen and a substantial leakage of preferences from an unendorsed Nationalist Party candidate.

In the aftermath of the election Curtin found himself at the head of a significantly augmented party that included Ben Chifley and Dr Herbert Vere Evatt, who had stood down from the High Court of Australia to contest the New South Wales federal seat of Barton. Only a week after the outbreak of war in 1939 Curtin had opposed the idea that Labor should enter a national government of all parties such as would eventuate in the United Kingdom a few months later, contending that he and his party would ‘better be able to do our duty for the country, usefully and forcefully, as unfettered watchdogs of the public interest’. Now, in the wake of his narrow victory in the election, Menzies again offered Labor membership in a national government and Curtin again refused. Instead Menzies agreed to Curtin’s counter proposal for the establishment of an advisory war council. This arguably gave Curtin a much-enhanced awareness of war policy issues without having to take any of the responsibility for, or suffer any community backlash against, the wartime controls that continued until Japan came into the war.

Menzies was overseas for four months in the first half of 1941 and during his absence Curtin and Acting Prime Minister and Country Party leader Arthur Fadden issued a joint statement warning of the deterioration of the security situation in the Pacific. Curtin also agreed to the dispatch of the Australian 8th Division to Singapore after British Prime Minister Winston Churchill promised to send part of the British fleet to the region if Australia’s strategic interests were threatened.

On his return to Australia in May, and beset by dissension in his own party, Menzies offered to serve under Curtin in a national government, an invitation again rejected by Curtin despite pressure from within his own ranks, especially from Dr Herbert Vere Evatt, who wanted power at the first opportunity. On 28 August Menzies resigned and Arthur Coles, who had temporarily rejoined the UAP, resigned in protest to revert to his independent status. The subsequent stopgap government led by Fadden lost power when Coles and the other independent, Alexander Wilson, crossed the floor of the House to secure the passage of a no-confidence vote on the Fadden Government’s Budget by 36 votes to 33.

This was the eighth – and to date, the last – occasion on which a government either lost office or was forced to an election following a vote in the House of Representatives.

On 7 October 1941 Curtin was sworn in as Prime Minister and Minister for Defence Coordination (later Defence), heading a nineteen-man ministry with Frank Forde as his deputy, Ben Chifley as Treasurer and effectively number two in the Cabinet, and Dr Evatt as Attorney-General and Minister for External Affairs.

Prime Minister, 1941–45

WARTIME LEADER IN THE CRITICAL YEARS 1941 TO 1943

Informed by his involvement in the Advisory War Council, in the weeks following his assumption of the office of Prime Minister, Curtin generally continued the policies of the previous government. However, he did insist that the Australian 9th Division be relieved from the siege of Tobruk. In mid-November 1941, the Royal Australian Navy cruiser HMAS Sydney was lost with all hands in an engagement with the Kormoran, a German raider disguised as a merchant cruiser. On 1 December 1941 the War Cabinet held an emergency meeting in Melbourne amid rapidly growing concern over Japanese belligerence.

On the morning of 8 December, barely two months after taking office, Curtin was awoken by his press secretary to the news of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbour, and Australia for the first time in its history independently declared war on a foreign power. Before the month was out, and in the aftermath of the loss of the British warships HMS Prince of Wales and HMS Repulse and the growing recognition that the British response would be inadequate for the defence of Singapore, Curtin delivered his New Year’s message to the Australian public in the form of an article published in the Melbourne Herald of 27 December 1941:

Without any inhibitions of any kind I make it quite clear that Australia looks to America, free from any pangs as to our traditional links or kinship with the United Kingdom.

We know the problems that the United Kingdom faces. We know the constant threat of invasion. We know the dangers of dispersal of strength, but we know, too, that Australia can go and Britain can still hold on.

We are, therefore, determined that Australia shall not go, and we shall devote all our energies towards the shaping of a plan, with the United States as its keystone, which will give to our country some confidence of being able to hold out until the tide of battle swings against our enemy. [20]

When Singapore fell to the Japanese on 15 February 1942, Curtin in a press statement told the Australian people:

The fall of Singapore can only be described as Australia’s Dunkirk…[The] fall of Dunkirk initiated the battle for Britain. The fall of Singapore opens the Battle for Australia…What the Battle for Britain required, so the Battle for Australia requires…Our honeymoon has finished. It is now work or fight as we have never worked or fought before… [21]

Four days later – and after the first bombing of Darwin, the first ‘physical contact of war within Australia’ – Curtin, from hospital where he had been admitted with gastritis, was asking Australians each to ‘vow that this blow at Darwin and the loss it has involved and the suffering it has occasioned shall gird our loins and nerve our steel’. [22]

Against this backdrop Curtin and Churchill engaged in a war of cables concerning the control of two divisions of Australian troops returning from the Middle East with the Dutch East Indies as their original intended destination. While Curtin was urging that these troops should now return to Australia to take part in the defence of their homeland against a possible Japanese invasion, Churchill, supported by US President Roosevelt, wanted at least one of the divisions to be diverted to Burma to help keep China in the war and provide a base for future operations against Japan itself.

When Churchill unilaterally ordered the diversion of the Australian 7th Division to Burma, Curtin, who was ‘unable to sleep for days at a time’ [23] while the troops were crossing the Indian Ocean, countermanded this order, telling the British Prime Minister that ‘it was quite impossible to reverse a decision which we have made with the utmost care’. [24] He did, however, allow a significant number of troops to stop off in Ceylon as a temporary measure, but only after the main body of troops reached Australia safely was Curtin released ‘from great darkness and unhappiness’. [25]

On 14 March Curtin became the first Australian Prime Minister to address the American people, [26] referring in his broadcast to Australia as ‘the last bastion between the West Coast of America and the Japanese’. [27] Four days later General Douglas MacArthur arrived in Australia to take up his appointment by Roosevelt – ‘with Curtin’s agreement’ [28] – as Supreme Commander of the South-West Pacific Area. The nature and consequences of the working relationship that was to develop between these two men of such strikingly different personalities have become both the stuff of legend and the source of historical controversy, especially concerning the degree to which Curtin was justified in an apparent surrender of national sovereignty.

However, despite the problems arising from the Allied decision to concentrate on a ‘Hitler-first’ strategy, a decision of which Curtin only became fully aware in May 1942, the American naval victories of the Coral Sea and Midway Island in May and June effectively removed the immediate threat of invasion. The Coral Sea victory also provided Curtin with the setting for his ‘most stirring war time speech’, in which he called on each Australian:

…who today is being defended by these gallant men in that engagement...that he owes it to these men, and to the future of the country, not to be stinting in what he will now do for Australia.33

As the months went by Curtin’s task increasingly became one of sustaining the total war effort in the face of ‘growing public complacency’.30 During the struggle for New Guinea, when Port Moresby was under serious threat, for a time Curtin’s ‘sea of austerity’ required rationing of a whole variety of civilian goods, with added taxes on alcohol, tobacco and cinema and theatre tickets, the reduction of greyhound and horse racing, and restrictions on meals at restaurants and cafes.31

Fortunately, ‘his intensity and passion made a profound impact’ on the nation at large32 and a high degree of cooperation was achieved. By October 1942 the US Ambassador to Australia, Nelson Johnson, felt able to assure President Roosevelt that Curtin had succeeded in lifting the ‘black blanket of despair’ from his fellow countrymen.33

One major source of concern to Curtin for much of the war was the ongoing conflict with sections of the trade union movement on the coalfields, which at times drove him to the point of despair;34 however, despite numerous outbreaks of industrial conflict, no major strike took place. In this regard, Curtin was greatly assisted after his government lifted the ban on the Communist Party, which, as a consequence of Hitler’s invasion of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, now gave total ongoing support to the war effort.
In any case, by mid-September 1942, the tide was turning as the Japanese were being pushed back along the Kokoda Track in New Guinea. Kokoda itself was retaken on 2 November while the great Allied victory at El Alamein two days later provided the opportunity for the Australian 9th Division to be brought home from the Middle East.

In late October, confronted with arguments about the responsibility Australia owed to its Allies in pursuing the offensive into territory occupied by the Japanese, Curtin decided to seek to persuade the ALP to change the party policy that to this point had prevented Australians from being conscripted to fight outside Australian territory. Given his party’s – and his own – strong opposition to conscription during World War I, Curtin had a battle on his hands when he raised the issue using the term ‘one army under one command’ at the party’s national conference in November 1942 and again at a special conference in January 1943.

Despite strong opposition from Arthur Calwell and others, Curtin won the day by confining his proposal to extend conscription to an area south of the Equator and east to the Solomon Islands, arguing that essentially all he was doing was modifying the definition of ‘Australian territory’ to enable full Australian involvement in campaigns in ‘islands outside the political administration of Australia but strategically vital to Australia’.

Ironically, this made little practical difference in the conduct of the war since no Australian conscripts in the Australian Imperial Forces fought outside Australian territory, except for militia units in Merauke in Dutch New Guinea. However, politically and psychologically this was a crucial triumph for Curtin, which both defused the situation within the ALP and also led to divisions within the Opposition ranks in terms of the formation of the breakaway ‘National Service Group’, as well as removing a potentially damaging issue from the agenda for the forthcoming 1943 election campaign.

ON THE HOME FRONT

The conversion of the Australian economy to the needs of total war has been described as a ‘massive achievement’. A critical element in this regard was the Curtin Government’s achievement of effectively excluding the states from collecting income tax. In July 1942 the High Court ruled as constitutional a series of Acts passed by the Australian Parliament that provided, among other things, for Commonwealth financial assistance to the states provided they did not attempt to collect their own income taxes. The Commonwealth’s action followed the refusal of the states to cede this power voluntarily for the duration of the war, but the effect of the High Court’s ruling on the uniform tax case was to bring about an extraordinarily significant permanent change in federal-state relations. The Government also introduced legislation to enable it, rather than the states, to collect an entertainments tax.

Opposition within the ALP to the increased taxation, especially of lower income workers, that flowed from the new tax scales was eased by the government’s decision to use some of its newly found flow of income to introduce Commonwealth widows’ pensions. At the beginning of 1943 the Curtin Government created a ‘National Welfare Fund’, which was financed from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, ‘as an integral part of the Government’s plans for the social security of the people’. Unemployment, sickness and pharmaceutical benefits followed during the Curtin Government’s second term (1943–45), but plans for an effective national scheme of hospital and medical benefits ran into problems with strong opposition from the medical profession.
In terms of international law and status, the passage of the Statute of Westminster Adoption Act in the second half of 1942 was of considerable legal significance. Even before its adoption by the Australian Parliament, the enactment of the statute by the British Parliament in 1931 amounted to a declaration ‘that the imperial parliament would exercise no supervisory powers over the legislation of self-governing dominions’. However, the Lyons and Menzies governments had made no formal moves to ratify the Act because of continuing dependence on British naval power in the event of a threat to Australia’s security. They had asserted that Australia’s effective independence was more than adequate without legal statement.

The passage of the 1942 legislation, piloted through the Australian Parliament by the Minister for External Affairs, Dr Herbert Evatt, removed legal constraints relating to extra-territoriality and the Colonial Laws Validity Act 1865 (UK), thus allaying legal doubts about the extent of the government’s constitutional powers to pursue the war effort and to plan for postwar reconstruction.

Opposition by a number of non-Labor politicians to ratifying this statute was mainly on the grounds that it might have the long-term effect of weakening ties with Great Britain but this was certainly never part of Curtin’s or Evatt’s intentions.

The Curtin Government also secured the passage of the Australian Broadcasting Act 1942, which replaced the Australian Broadcasting Act 1932 and provided a comprehensive code that covered both the national broadcasting service and what the government described as the ‘necessary minimum regulation’ of commercial broadcasting.” The Australian Broadcasting Commission (ABC) was reconstructed to consist of five commissioners, and a parliamentary standing committee was given the power to investigate all broadcasting matters.

Other legislation passed during the life of the first Curtin Government included the Dairying Industry Assistance Act 1942 and its amending legislation (1943), which provided for a subsidy to, and the regulation of, industrial relations in the dairy industry; the Women’s Employment Act 1942, which was concerned with allowing women to undertake work ‘previously performed by men or not performed at all in Australia” and also (in the pre-equal pay era) with the fixing of terms and conditions for women so employed; the Commonwealth Electoral (War-Time) Act 1943, which gave the vote to those aged between 18 and 21 who had served or were serving in the armed forces outside Australia; and the Australian Soldiers Repatriation Act 1943, which amended earlier legislation by extending its provisions to members of the women’s fighting services.

THE 1943 ELECTION
Towards the middle of 1943, with the deadline for the federal election only weeks away, the Opposition stepped up its attack on the Minister for Labour and National Service, the Right Honourable Edward (‘Eddie’) J Ward, and his accusations (first voiced in October 1942) that the Menzies and Fadden governments had agreed to a plan, known as the ‘Brisbane Line’, for concentrating Australian defence forces in east-central Australia.

Curtin, while privately describing Ward as a ‘ratbag’, “let the issue run for a time before suspending Ward from his Ministry and establishing a royal commission” to investigate the issue. The royal commissioner, the Honourable Charles John Lowe, subsequently ruled that he could not make a finding because Ward had used parliamentary privilege to refuse to give evidence.
In early July, after surviving a no-confidence motion on 24 June by 27 votes to 26, Curtin obtained a dissolution of the House of Representatives with an election scheduled for 21 August 1943. During the election campaign Curtin, who made the first ever national policy speech from Canberra, concentrated both on his government’s success in the conduct of the war and his schemes for postwar reconstruction while his party emphasised that ‘You can’t have Curtin if you don’t vote Labor’. Many electors were probably also reassured when Curtin, in Perth three days before the election, promised that ‘my government during the war will not socialize any industry’.

The result was Labor’s greatest ever landslide federal election victory – winning 49 of the 73 seats in the House of Representatives and all nineteen Senate seats being contested. From 1 July 1944 the Curtin Government would have a commanding majority in both Houses of the Federal Parliament, the first time a Labor national government had been in this position since before the conscription split in 1916. The election was also notable for the election of the first women members of the Australian Parliament – Dame Enid Lyons, widow of former Prime Minister Joseph Lyons, in the House of Representatives, and Dorothy Tangney from Western Australia to fill a casual vacancy in the Senate.

For Curtin and his government the later years of the war have been described as ‘a time of frustration rather than mastery’. While Curtin and his ministers grappled with the competing demands of industry and the armed services, General MacArthur’s war strategy was increasingly based on limiting direct participation by Australian troops, including their total exclusion from the invasion of the Philippines. In this sense ‘Australian strategy was increasingly dictated by the constraints of allied diplomacy’ and as a consequence the links between Curtin and MacArthur became less and less significant, which in turn seemed to imply a lessening of Australian participation at the peace table.

Curtin’s own health also had become a matter for ever-increasing concern. In retrospect it seems that after a major overseas trip to the UK and the US in April-June 1944, he was ‘never the same man again’. After heart trouble forced him into hospital in November, he did not return to duty until late January 1945 and made only one more major parliamentary speech before the onset of his last illness in April 1945.

On the international front, Evatt, in a speech to Parliament in October 1943, had listed Australian priorities as including Australia’s right to ‘take part in all aspects of the post-war settlement’, Australia’s predominant interest in the Pacific regions, the ‘pivotal’ position of Australian–New Zealand collaboration and the right of smaller nations to play their part in planning for the United Nations.

For his part, Curtin – perhaps, it has been suggested, in response to the post-election return of Menzies as Opposition leader – placed great emphasis on modernising Australia’s traditional links with Britain and the Commonwealth. In an address to the Federal ALP Conference in December 1943, Curtin had proposed the development of machinery for the imperial coordination of policy between the meetings of British Commonwealth prime ministers that were inevitably periodic. In this regard, he possibly hoped that Australia would have more scope for independent action and contribution to policymaking than would be possible through the Australian-US relationship. Certainly this seems to have been the major motive behind the Anzac Agreement between Australia and New Zealand, which was signed on 21 January 1944 after a conference in Canberra between delegates from the two nations.

The Anzac Agreement, as formulated by Evatt, sought the establishment of a regional zone of defence comprising the South-West and South Pacific areas that was based on Australia and New Zealand. In this regard, the signatories agreed that ‘it would be proper for Australia and New Zealand to assume full responsibility for policing or sharing in policing such areas...[in the region] as may from time to time be agreed upon’. The agreement has been described as akin to the ‘Monroe Doctrine’ that the US had asserted for the Americas, with its declaration that ‘no change in the sovereignty or system of control of any of the islands of the Pacific should be effected’ without the concurrence of the signatories and that the US ‘should not retain control over bases built on British territories, including Australia and New Zealand’.

Curtin’s trip in April, May and June 1944, first to Washington and then to attend the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference in London before returning via Canada, had two central objectives. On the first issue he achieved Anglo–American agreement to the view that the Australian contribution to the war effort would increasingly be directed to the provision of food and other supplies rather than military personnel. His second objective concerning the establishment of postwar Commonwealth collaborative machinery in the form of a secretariat based in London did not attract any support – in retrospect he was twenty years ahead of his time.

Nevertheless, he had established his credentials in terms of maintaining the British connection – while in the UK he was awarded the freedom of the City of London – and six months earlier he had secured the nomination of the King’s brother, His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, to succeed Lord Gowrie as Governor-General. From a personal point of view, however, Curtin would have regretted Lord Gowrie’s departure in the second half of 1944 after eight years in the post, as he had developed a warm friendship with the Governor-General and his wife during many a lonely weekend in Canberra.

Curtin found the Anzac Agreement somewhat of an embarrassment when meeting with Roosevelt in the US in 1944, but he strongly supported the concept of an international security organisation in place of the League of Nations that had so disappointed him in the interwar years. While he had always given Evatt strong backing in his role as Minister for External Affairs, Curtin did not particularly like him – hence his decision in 1945 to appoint Frank Forde as leader of the Australian delegation to the United Nations Conference on International Organization held in San Francisco, California to establish the United Nations. However, by the time Forde and Evatt arrived at San Francisco, Curtin was in hospital and it was Evatt who secured the publicity with his energetic – if at best only partly successful – campaign to enhance the status of the ‘middle powers’ in the world organisation.

On the domestic front ever-increasing attention was being given to the issue of the postwar world. Until February 1945 Curtin’s loyal and most influential lieutenant, Ben Chifley, was at the helm of the Department of Post-War Reconstruction, which was established in December 1942. Alongside the expansion of social welfare benefits, funded from the greatly increased taxation revenue available to the Commonwealth since the uniform taxation legislation of 1942, was a range of issues relating to Keynesian planning for the postwar economy, which had the 1945 ‘White Paper on Full Employment’ as its centre piece. In this regard, available evidence shows that Curtin played a considerable personal role in influencing the final text of the White Paper.55

Curtin also gave total backing to Chifley’s legislative reform of the banking system, which aimed at ensuring government control of the monetary system – an issue close to Curtin’s heart (as it was to Chifley’s) after the difficulties the Scullin Government faced with the Commonwealth Bank Board during the Great Depression. Other important developments included the negotiation of a Commonwealth–state housing agreement and the establishment of various rural and regional reconstruction bodies.

While the establishment of a separate Department of Immigration did not occur until after Curtin’s death, the appointment of Arthur Calwell as Minister for Information after the 1943 election paved the way for the active postwar migration policy that Curtin had strongly favoured. On the education front, planning was under way in 1944 and 1945 for the establishment of the Australian National University and the provision of Commonwealth scholarships to university students.

One serious setback for Curtin and his government, however, was the crushing defeat of Evatt’s attempt to gain greatly increased constitutional power for the Commonwealth with his ‘Fourteen Powers’ referendum in August 1944. Curtin certainly favoured the general principle of constitutional reform to enhance the power of the Commonwealth and told a convention of federal and state representatives in November 1942 that as the Commonwealth pursued objectives such as improved labour standards, economic advancement and social security, it would find that ‘at every turn in the problem of post-war reconstruction we shall be confronted by some constitutional barrier’.56

At the same time, wisely as it turned out, he was far from enthusiastic, after several states had failed to legislate in terms of the November 1942 agreement, about asking electors to endorse a large-scale ‘package proposal’, and on his return from overseas took little part in the campaign. Politically, the successful ‘No’ campaign greatly assisted Menzies in his moves for the reunification and rejuvenation of the non-Labor parties, which culminated in the formation of the Liberal Party of Australia towards the end of 1944.

FINAL DAYS

After suffering a coronary occlusion in November 1944, Curtin was hospitalised in Melbourne. His daughter Elsie came to Melbourne to be with him as he slowly recovered and then his wife came to Canberra and stayed with him at The Lodge until he resumed official duties on 22 January 1945. Almost immediately he had to defend his government against charges that moves to nationalise Australia’s internal airlines were part of a wider ‘socialist agenda’. These moves were blocked by the High Court and subsequently the Chifley Government established Trans Australia Airlines in 1946 and acquired Qantas in 1947.

At the same time, in a speech to government and industry representatives, Curtin described government action to prevent rising unemployment as the necessity of an ‘enlarged role’ for government. On 28 February 1945 he made what might be described as his last major parliamentary speech, which dealt with the war effort (past and present) and canvassed the prospects for an international peacekeeping organisation, warning that ‘countries cannot always have their own way, if they really wish to live in amity’.57
On 18 April Curtin paid his parliamentary tribute to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who had died six days earlier. At the end of the month Curtin was admitted to a private hospital in Canberra and, with Frank Forde absent at the San Francisco Conference, it fell to Chifley, the Acting Prime Minister, to announce the German surrender on 8 May. After several weeks in hospital, Curtin returned to The Lodge and remained there with his wife Elsie until his death on 5 July. After services in Canberra and a lying-in-state in King’s Hall on 6 July, his body was flown to Perth and he was buried at Karrakatta Cemetery on Sunday, 8 July before a crowd estimated at over 20 000. For much of his life Curtin had not been a religious man and there is conflicting evidence about the extent to which he maintained his beliefs, but it was at Curtin’s own request, made in his final weeks, that the funeral service was conducted by his friend, the Reverend Hector Harrison, a Presbyterian.

Curtin’s deputy, Frank Forde, who had returned from the San Francisco Conference only a few days before Curtin’s death, served as Prime Minister for only one week, still the shortest term ever for any Australian prime minister. On 12 July the Labor Caucus elected Ben Chifley to the leadership by a substantial majority and his government was sworn in on the following day, with the only change from Curtin’s last Ministry the inclusion of a Western Australian, Herbert V Johnson, to replace Curtin himself. Chifley had always been a valuable personal and political ally and confidante to Curtin, and his weeks as Acting Prime Minister after Curtin’s hospitalisation in April undoubtedly contributed to the ease of his victory.

For Geoffrey Serle, the ‘great justification of Curtin as Prime Minister is not merely that there was no viable alternative government in 1941–45, but that his contemporaries acknowledged that no other politician was fit for the task’. At Australia’s most critical hour Curtin ‘successfully projected himself as national leader, inspiring respect from cynical Australians as few Prime Ministers have done. His achievements all derive essentially from character...’

In terms of ideals, the inscription on his gravestone perhaps best sums up Curtin’s outlook and contribution to Australia:

His country was his pride
His brother man his cause.

CORRESPONDENCE OF JOHN CURTIN AS PRIME MINISTER, GENERAL ALPHABETICAL SERIES, 1941–44
Recorded by: 1941–44 The Rt Hon. John Joseph Ambrose Curtin PC (CP 258)
1944 The Rt Hon. Francis Michael Forde PC (CP 81)
1941–44 Prime Minister’s Department (CA 12)
Quantity: 12.6 metres (Canberra)

This series comprises correspondence files maintained in the Prime Minister’s Office from October 1941, when John Curtin became Prime Minister, to December 1944. The series also reflects the extended periods in 1944 when Frank Forde was Acting Prime Minister, but does not include the correspondence for the last six months of Curtin’s term of office until his death in early July 1945.

The files mainly contain representations made directly to Curtin. The earliest of these relate to matters initially raised with Curtin as the MHR for Fremantle and then with him as Prime Minister, or matters that were passed on to him from the Fadden Government. Some letters are addressed to Mrs Elsie Curtin, to his Private Secretary, Eric Tonkin, or, in 1944, to Frank Forde.

The correspondence originated from political colleagues, personal friends, branches of political parties (particularly the ALP), trade unions, local government authorities, returned servicemen’s associations, business interests, the general public, churches, women's groups and other community organisations.

The subject matter is wide-ranging and deals with requests for exemption or release from military service; pay and conditions for servicemen and their families; pensions; rationing; questions about liquor, censorship, manpower, the effect of particular National Security Regulations, requisitioned property, aliens, internees, war loans, daylight saving and pay-as-you-earn taxation; comments on the government’s conduct of the war and expressions of support; American forces in Australia; the 1944 referendum; the appointment of His Royal Highness (HRH) the Duke of Gloucester as Governor-General and the re-appointment of Stanley Melbourne Bruce as High Commissioner in London; and postwar planning and so on.

The series also contains a small amount of official and more personal correspondence dealing with Curtin’s travel arrangements and expressions of goodwill and concern about his health. Some policy issues are dealt with, mainly through individual cases, such as the treatment of aliens, wartime regulations, postwar reconstruction, immigration policy, housing, Indigenous Australians and appointments to official positions.
In general, replies were sent out under the signature block of Curtin's main private secretaries (Eric Tonkin and Frederick McLaughlin) or were signed directly by Curtin himself or by Forde.

In addition to letters, telegrams and handwritten notes, items in this series may also contain newspaper clippings, pamphlets, patriotic songs, poems and a few photographs. These items provide considerable insight into Curtin as Prime Minister and into Australia during the war years. Many items in this series have been digitised and can be viewed online on RecordSearch.

CORRESPONDENCE OF JOHN CURTIN AS PRIME MINISTER, SPECIAL SUBJECT SERIES, 1941–44

 Recorded by: 1941–44 The Rt Hon. John Joseph Ambrose Curtin PC (CP 258)
  1944 The Rt Hon. Francis Michael Forde PC (CP 81)
  1941–44 Prime Minister’s Department (CA 12)

 Quantity: 1.98 metres (Canberra)

 This series comprises special subject correspondence files maintained in the Prime Minister’s Office from 1942 to the end of 1944. In general the files relate to major public issues or aspects of government business. The 1944 files also reflect the increasing role of Frank Forde as Acting Prime Minister in the latter period of the Curtin Government. However, there are no files covering the last six months of Curtin’s term of office until his death in July 1945.

 Most files contain representations from community groups, local government authorities, trade organisations or individuals on a particular issue – eg wartime restrictions on alcohol, the legalisation of the Communist Party, John (‘Jack’) Lang, racing and so on. Rather than being sent directly to Prime Minister Curtin, these letters were often forwarded to his office by the correspondent’s local member of Federal Parliament. Other files contain material relating to general government business, eg the Defence Act, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, invitations accepted and declined, correspondence with state premiers and so on. Many of these items contain copies of correspondence from departmental files kept by the Prime Minister’s Department. A few files cover more personal matters such as birthday and Christmas greetings, and two files (items 28 and 54) contain material relating to Mrs Elsie Curtin.

 Most letters received a generic reply relating to the particular issue, which was sent out under the signature block of one of Curtin’s private secretaries, Eric Tonkin or Frederick McLaughlin. Many of the file copies of the replies are on recycled paper, a wartime austerity measure. Wartime considerations are also reflected in the date of some replies, in particular 25 December or 1 January, days which in normal circumstances would have been public holidays.
This fascinating series consists of items that, like those in M1415, provide considerable insight into John Curtin as Prime Minister and Australia during the war years. Items in this series have been digitised and can be viewed online on RecordSearch.

Among the many Christmas greetings sent to Prime Minister Curtin in 1943 was this card from Flight Sergeant D J Chapman and the ‘RAAF boys’ of No. 150 Squadron. NAA: M1416, 76, p. 49

REPORTS AND CONFERENCE PAPERS MAINTAINED BY JOHN CURTIN AS PRIME MINISTER, 1941–45

MISCELLANEOUS LIBRARY MATERIAL, 1961–

Recorded by: 1961–74 Commonwealth Archives Office, Victorian and Tasmanian branches (CA 852)
1974– Australian Archives, Vic (CA 1727)

Quantity: 0.36 metres (Melbourne)

This series consists of small printed booklets entitled Digest of decisions and announcements, and important speeches by the Prime Minister, which are effectively summaries of key Commonwealth government policy statements and activities. The series commenced in October 1941 with the Curtin Government and continued until the defeat of the Chifley Government on 19 December 1949. The subject matter from the Curtin period is primarily concerned with the state of the war and aspects of Australia’s war effort, including administrative arrangements, war casualties, honours and awards, industries, loans, prisoners-of-war, air raid precautions and attacks, National Security Regulations and so on.

The Chifley Government period is more concerned with postwar reconstruction, international organisation and Australian foreign policy. It also includes Budget speeches, speeches introducing key legislation or enunciating policy and Chifley’s ‘Report to the Nation’ broadcasts (1948–49).

The digests include speeches and statements made by both Curtin and Chifley and several of their ministers, particularly Forde, Evatt and Dedman. Many of the speeches were given in Parliament (and will also appear in Hansard) while others were probably obtained from other government sources or were reported in the media.

COPIES OF PHOTOGRAPHS OF JOHN CURTIN, 1938–45
Recorded by: The Rt Hon. John Joseph Ambrose Curtin (CP 258)
Quantity: 0.54 metres (Perth)
This series consists of 25 black-and-white photographs of John Curtin, taken mainly between 1938 and early 1945. The photographs are of Curtin with other political figures or at official functions.

The photographs capture aspects of Curtin’s visit to Washington, London (for the Imperial Conference of Empire Prime Ministers) and Canada from April to June 1944. Images include photographs of Curtin and the Prime Minister of New Zealand, Peter Fraser, after their conferral as Honorary Doctors of Law at Cambridge University, England; Curtin addressing a combined session of the Houses of Parliament in Ottawa, Canada; a parliamentary dinner in honour of General Douglas MacArthur in 1942; and Curtin with William Morris Hughes and HRH the Duke of Gloucester shortly after the latter took up his appointment as Governor-General of Australia in January 1945. The series also includes some photographs, one of which appears to date from about 1920, of Curtin before he became Prime Minister.

COPIES OF PHOTOGRAPHS RELATING TO JOHN CURTIN’S TERM AS PRIME MINISTER, 1941–45
Recorded by: The Rt Hon. John Joseph Ambrose Curtin PC (CP 258)

Records in the John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library

The John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library (JCPML) holds significant records relating to John Curtin. Most of these records have been digitised and are available for viewing online through the JCPML’s Electronic Research Archive (ERA). Photographs are also available through PictureAustralia. The record listings in this guide are representative rather than comprehensive and researchers are referred to ERA for a complete view of the records held in the JCPML. For website addresses of the JCPML and PictureAustralia, see Appendix 5.

The records are arranged under the following headings and then alphabetically within each section by the agency or person who created the records:

- Early life and career to 1917
- Editor of the Westralian Worker, 1917–28
- Leader of the Opposition, 1935–41
- Prime Minister, 1941–45
- Death and memorials, 1945–2003
- Portraits and photographs, 1885–1945
- Personal possessions and library
- Oral history interviews

BESSANT, BOB. PERSONAL PAPERS, 1906–10
\( \text{SER0307} \)

Quantity: 5 items

This series comprises four postcards and a commemorative bookmark. The postcards were sent sometime in 1907–09 from John Curtin to Gertrude and Jessie Gunn. The bookmark was created by the Victorian Socialist Party (VSP) to commemorate the death of Annie (Nancy) Gunn in 1906. Nancy Gunn joined the newly formed VSP (probably in 1905-06) and she and John Curtin were believed to have been sweethearts.
After the death of Nancy, John Curtin and Jessie Gunn corresponded for some years. Curtin was very close to the Gunn family and maintained connections with them all his life.

FITZGERALD, TOM. RESEARCH NOTES FOR A BIOGRAPHY OF JOHN CURTIN – LOOSE PAPERS, c1952–92

Quantity: 15 files

This series contains original and copied material collected by Tom Fitzgerald, a respected economist and journalist. Fitzgerald planned to write a biography of John Curtin, but this work was still in progress when he died in 1993.

Among the items in this series are extracts from books, encyclopaedias, dictionaries, reports, papers, Commonwealth Hansard, articles and book reviews from newspapers and journals. Other items include a photograph of John Curtin, a set of index cards created by Fitzgerald that provide references and information on specific people and events, and anti-conscription postcards from 1916. These items, which include a large number of book extracts on topics as varied as women, feminism, war, politics, philosophy, language, socialism, theology, science, histories, nationalism and culture, are generally not duplicated elsewhere in the Fitzgerald records.

This series also contains loose notes bundled together under titles such as ‘General notes re Curtin 1907–1979’. The research material includes information that dates from as early as 1789.

United Women’s ‘No-conscription’ pageant and procession, Melbourne, 21 October 1916

This item contains seven postcards of scenes from this anti-conscription rally with inscriptions on the backs by both John Curtin and his daughter.
FITZGERALD, TOM. RESEARCH NOTES – BIOGRAPHY OF JOHN CURTIN – FILES, c1952–92

This series contains material collected by Tom Fitzgerald, a respected economist and journalist. Fitzgerald planned to write a biography of John Curtin, but this work was still in progress when he died in 1993.

Material in this series dates from as early as 1789 and consists primarily of photocopied material, most of which was annotated by Fitzgerald. The annotated photocopied material is often accompanied by Fitzgerald’s own notes, illustrating his thoughts about particular issues, his evaluation of sources, matters to be clarified and so on.

There is much duplication since Fitzgerald would create files containing material from a particular source and then distribute duplicate copies of relevant material to files dealing with particular topics.

Among the subjects covered are individuals (eg Frank Anstey and William Morris Hughes), events, organisations and issues (eg World War I, compulsory military training, education and self-education, Curtin and economics, the Socialist newspaper and the VSP).

The range and volume of photocopied material is large. It includes extracts from books, theses, pamphlets, journals, newspapers, encyclopaedias, dictionaries and Commonwealth Hansard reports. It also contains minutes of meetings and copies of items from manuscript and archival collections. The research material covers the origin and history of political terms, philosophies and movements.

This series also contains Fitzgerald’s correspondence with Curtin’s contemporaries and others about sources and information relevant to Curtin. It includes notes of interviews and conversations with people such as Sir Paul Hasluck, Peter Ryan (of the Melbourne University Press), Geoffrey Serle and Sir Percy Spender.

The most significant correspondence consists of original letters to Fitzgerald from Curtin’s daughter Elsie Macleod, along with copies of Fitzgerald’s letters to Mrs Macleod and copies of material in Mrs Macleod’s possession relating to Curtin and his family, and to issues arising in the letters (eg the television program Hellfire Jack, Curtin’s reading choices and the memorial service for Curtin at Westminster Abbey, London).

These letters date from 1975 to 1992 and include the exchange of personal and family information between Elsie Macleod and Tom Fitzgerald and his wife, Margaret.

John Curtin – the opening, 1911–88

This item contains Fitzgerald’s draft of the opening for his biography on Curtin. In it, Fitzgerald notes that Curtin’s writings under pen names in the Socialist and the Westralian Worker reveal ‘unexpected, hitherto unknown qualities’ in Curtin.

Notes regarding ‘The man on the job’ and ‘The right to loaf’ and the Argus, July-August 1912
These notes relate to the furore created when Curtin advocated that workers had a right to loaf in a 1912 lecture ‘The man on the job’ (includes text of lecture).

Curtin, J – The Independent Workers’ Federation with its clothes off!, c1912
This item contains an impassioned attack by Curtin on the Independent Workers’ Federation, which he brands as a bogus union run by big money and employers’ groups.

Notes regarding Curtin’s arrest and imprisonment, December 1916
This item comprises cuttings from the Socialist.

Quantity: 2 video recordings

This series contains a video recording produced as part of the commemorations associated with the fiftieth anniversary of the end of World War II and a shorter version of the same video tailored for use with schools and students.

Paul Hasluck – war historian, 1995

Former journalist, public servant, parliamentarian and Governor-General, Paul Hasluck is interviewed by his son Nicholas about his life and work. The item includes Paul Hasluck’s recollections of John Curtin. They first met in Perth in the 1920s, when Curtin was President of the WA District Council of the Australian Journalists’ Association (AJA) and Hasluck represented the cadet journalists on the council.

Hasluck also recalls Curtin’s involvement with journalism courses at UWA at this time, the role Curtin played in preparing WA’s case for the Commonwealth Grants Commission in 1933–34, Curtin as Leader of the Opposition and Prime Minister, and a moving speech to Australian Labor Party (ALP) members in Melbourne in 1943 on the need for conscription.

AUSTRALIAN JOURNALISTS’ ASSOCIATION. ANNUAL REPORTS, 1922–84

Quantity: 2 files

This series contains digitised annual reports of the WA District of the AJA from 1922 to 1945. These reports were copied from original records held by the Media, Entertainment and Arts Alliance. The series also contains a copy of the AJA’s 1984–85 annual report, which featured a commemorative cover showing John Curtin’s photograph and his 1917 application for membership of the union.
AUSTRALIAN JOURNALISTS’ ASSOCIATION. MEMORABILIA, 1960

Quantity: 1 item

This series consists of a copy of the menu for the fiftieth anniversary dinner of the WA District of the AJA. Past presidents and secretaries of the association are listed on the back, including John Curtin, who was president of the WA District of the AJA from 1920 to 1925.

AUSTRALIAN JOURNALISTS’ ASSOCIATION. MEMBERSHIP REGISTERS, 1917–18

Quantity: 1 item

This series comprises a digital copy of the 1917–18 membership roll of the WA District of the AJA, which was copied from the register held by the Media, Entertainment and Arts Alliance. John Curtin is listed as a member.

AUSTRALIAN JOURNALISTS’ ASSOCIATION. THE ‘AUSTRALASIAN JOURNALIST’ MAGAZINE, 1920–25

Quantity: 4 items

This series comprises digital copies of the Australasian Journalist for the period when John Curtin was President of the WA District of the AJA (copied from volumes held by the Media, Entertainment and Arts Alliance and the Noel Butlin Archives Centre).

AUSTRALIAN LABOR PARTY – WA BRANCH. ‘WESTRALIAN WORKER’ NEWSPAPER, 1914–49

Quantity: 55 volumes

This series comprises bound volumes of the Westralian Worker, the WA Labor newspaper, from 1914 to 1949 and microfilm copies of the paper from 1915 to 1929. Volumes from the years of John Curtin’s editorship of the paper contain markings and some annotations, which he is believed to have made.

AUSTRALIAN LABOR PARTY – WA BRANCH. ‘WESTRALIAN WORKER’ NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS BY JOHN CURTIN, 1917–28

Quantity: 613 articles

This series comprises transcripts of all editorials published in the Westralian Worker during John Curtin’s editorship of the paper, including some from 1920 and 1921 that Curtin’s daughter, Elsie Macleod, attributed to Abraham Needham, Curtin’s father-in-law. The editorials often express Curtin’s personal opinions, in contrast to the rest of the paper, which was normally devoted to local news and reports of union activities.

Although Curtin began his career at the Westralian Worker as a radical socialist preoccupied with socialist principles and doctrine, he was gradually drawn into practical politics through his work with the WA Branch of the Labor Party. The editorials reflect this change in Curtin’s thinking as he moves away from militant socialism to moderate ALP politics, and provide insight into his beliefs on a wide range of matters.

Westralian Worker editorial, 23 February 1917

This item consists of Curtin's first editorial for the Westralian Worker, in which he attacks Prime Minister William Morris ('Billy') Hughes – ‘Hughes goes to the Tory Camp: Cabinet of six liberals governs Australia.’ The editorial espouses the belief that ‘the bowed back of Labor can now expect to have the stinging lash of unemployment and sweated industry applied unrelentingly’.

Westralian Worker editorial, 22 August 1919

In this editorial – ‘A Treaty based on militarism’ – Curtin unequivocally condemns the terms of the Treaty of Versailles.

Westralian Worker editorial, 17 March 1922

In this editorial Curtin discusses the press and its significance to the Labour Movement (‘The Editor writes a message’).

Westralian Worker editorial, 27 April 1923

In this editorial, titled ‘ANZAC – and since!’, Curtin writes of his disillusionment with the postwar world:

Unemployment! Class distinction! These are the outstanding features of the postwar era in every country.

Westralian Worker editorial, 3 April 1925

In an editorial entitled ‘Western Australia and the Federation’, Curtin writes about federal-state relations, including the need for tariff protection:

…it would be sheer suicide for the country to be dependent on the resources of even the most powerful of allies.

Westralian Worker editorial, 1 April 1927

Writing in this editorial about ‘The shorter working week’, Curtin argued that:

[The] universal adoption of the 44-hour week will place Australia once more in the forefront of those nations which have for their objective: Better conditions for the working class.

Westralian Worker editorial, 5 August 1927

In this editorial – ‘Pay for child endowment out of land values taxation’- Curtin argues that it is the nation’s responsibility to assist ‘over-burdened mothers in the proper rearing of their children.’
COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA. 'DIGESTS OF DECISIONS, ANNOUNCEMENTS AND IMPORTANT SPEECHES BY THE PRIME MINISTER (THE HON JOHN CURTIN)', 1941–45

Quantity: 5 bound volumes and duplicate booklets

The digests of decisions and announcements and important speeches by Prime Minister Curtin held in this series provide a summary of key Australian government policy statements and activities, commencing in October 1941 when the Curtin Government took office and continuing into the years of Chifley’s prime ministership.

During the Curtin period the digests mainly deal with the state of the war and aspects of Australia’s war effort, including administrative arrangements, war casualties, honours and awards, industries, loans, prisoners-of-war, air-raid precautions, enemy attacks, National Security regulations and visits abroad. The digests include speeches and statements made by John Curtin, Ben Chifley and several other ministers, particularly Frank Forde, Dr Herbert Evatt and John Dedman. Many of these speeches were made in Parliament and will also appear in the Hansard, while others were probably obtained from various government sources or media reports.

From the Grand Hôtel de la Paix in Geneva where he was attending the International Labour Organisation Conference in 1924, Curtin wrote this letter to his 'beloved' Elsie.

My Beloved, I got here on Saturday at two p.m. after a round twenty-three hour journey from Marseilles. It was the only direct trip to get to the railway station, the hotel was too expensive and we could not get a room there. Fortunately I met Mr. Caldwell (Mr. Hazel's friend) that I knew he on a special train to the next station. He appeared to be on a long walk and seemed tired. I gave him a fiver to stay at the hotel where there was a small room and 25 francs and meals and had to give me the address of the hotel.

I was told by the manager that the rate was too high. He knew the meaning of the word "too" and said he would take me to another room which would work out at 20 francs a day or about £6/10s a week. Switzerland is a dear place for travelers. I have already paid 12 francs and I expect to pay another 12 francs. The room is small but the whole place is very expensive. They are very greedy.

I have spent three days in Paris and have bought a lot of things from the shops. I am on my way to London where I will meet my ship's crew. I have got a lot of letters from Marseilles and I hope to get back to Australia when the conference is over.

‘DAILY NEWS’. ARTICLES BY JOHN CURTIN, 1931–33

Quantity: 71 articles

This series comprises transcripts of articles written by John Curtin between 1931 and 1933 when he was out of parliament. These weekly articles about ‘Labor news and views’ covered a variety of themes and included many that addressed the problems of the Depression. The Daily News published the column with the rider that ‘The matter is supplied officially and can be taken as the voice of the Labor [sic] movement in Western Australia.’

Curtin writes on the economic crisis, war reparations and overseas debts repayments and the need for reassessment.

Daily News, 'The Views of Labor', 27 September 1932

Curtin writes on the economic crisis and the need for total reconstruction of the national and international economies:

My own view is that two guiding principles should be invoked, namely, the nation as planner for the internal economy of each country, and international organisation for external exchanges.

Daily News, 'Labor's View', 7 December 1932

Under the heading 'Profits from gold not shared by miners', Curtin writes that ‘...although the gold industry is deriving unprecedented returns for its product, wages have not risen at all.’

In the same article, under the heading 'Banks: the loan', Curtin writes about the £8 million public loan floated by the government and concludes that ‘Loan flotation is a costly process for governments and a lucrative one for banks.’

Daily News, 'Labor Views', 28 March 1933

Under the heading 'Dealing with the Depression: monetary reform', Curtin attacks the deflationary policies of the anti-Labor forces, writing that:

...by these devices depression is not lessened but is intensified, and will, when production is further restricted, be further increased; that values diminish as the result; and that just as the foreign market for butter, for example, wilts, so will the home market further slacken by the growing impoverishment of the masses.
Labor'; 'Leader of the Federal Labor Party/Leader of the Opposition'; 'Prime Minister elect'; 'Prime Minister and Minister for Defence'; 'Late Prime Minister and Minister for Defence'; and 'West [sic] Australia (Overseas Visits).

Quantity: 84 articles

This series comprises transcripts of articles written by John Curtin in 1932 and 1933 when he was out of parliament. These weekly articles about ‘The Views of Labour’ covered a variety of themes and often addressed the problems of the Depression. The column was published by the West Australian at the request of the WA Branch of the Australian Labor Party, as a ‘Column weekly for the publication of views of the responsible body of Labour.’

The West Australian, ‘The Views of Labour’, 20 February 1932
In this article Curtin writes with approval of moves in America to combat the Depression. He writes that the US is: …deliberately using the national credit to artificially simulate industry; improve stocks; banish the fears that lead to the hoarding of private credit, raise prices; ease the strain on debtors and revitalise the securities of creditors; and promote that industrial activity which will mean the re-employment of large numbers of those whom the depression has deprived of the means of life.
In this article Curtin comments on the likely outcomes of an armaments conference at Geneva and the World Economic Conference in London, and states that:

Armaments are instruments of capitalist policy. While profound differences of policy exist between the capitalist powers, it is folly to expect disarmament to emerge from Geneva or anywhere else. A Disarmament Conference could only be effective after a World Economic Conference, and then only if the World Economic Conference could succeed in reconciling the antagonism of national capitalist systems.’

He further warns that ‘The danger of war in circumstances like these cannot be exaggerated.’

In this article Curtin quotes from the historical works of Archibald Alison and from the more recent works of John Maynard Keynes, Professor Karl Gustav Cassel and Sir Henry Strakosch in explaining the roots of the Depression, noting the damaging impact of contraction of currency and ‘the slave chain of gold’.

Tribute to John Curtin by Dame Mary Gilmore, 6 July 1945

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Sir Thomas Playford, 1 January 1966
In this item Sir Thomas Playford talks about his relationship as the Premier of South Australia with prime ministers Lyons, Curtin and Chifley, particularly in regard to federal–state relations. Playford recalls that Curtin’s focus was on fighting the war and that he made good use of the states to help in the war effort and on the home front, using state authorities and offices to good effect (eg in road works and administering rationing) and maintaining good communication with state premiers.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Murray Tyrrell, 7 February 1966
This is a recording of Professor Colin Hughes interviewing Murray Tyrrell, private secretary to Ben Chifley from 1943 to 1947, about Chifley and the relationship between Chifley and Prime Minister Curtin, for the ABC TV program Mr Prime Minister.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of John J Dedman, 7 February 1966

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Reginald Pollard, 8 February 1966
In this recording Professor Colin Hughes interviews Reginald Pollard, an ALP MP, about prime ministers Curtin and Chifley.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of John McEwen, 8 February 1966
This is a recording of Professor Colin Hughes interviewing John McEwen about prime ministers Lyons, Menzies, Curtin and Chifley. McEwen describes Curtin as a man of great capacity and courage because Curtin became Prime Minister in a time of great stress without having been a minister before.
Mr Prime Minister, interview of Sir Robert Menzies, 9 February 1966
In this recording Professor Colin Hughes interviews Sir Robert Menzies about former prime ministers Deakin, Bruce, Lyons, Curtin and Chifley.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Frank Green, 10 February 1966
In this recording Professor Colin Hughes interviews Frank Green, Clerk of the House of Representatives from 1937–55, about the various prime ministers who held office during his time in Parliament (Hughes, Bruce, Lyons, Curtin, Chifley and Menzies).

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Edward Holloway, 10 February 1966
In this item Edward Holloway talks about his long career in the Labour Movement and in the ALP. The recording includes comments on Curtin's style in Cabinet and the Labor Caucus, and why Curtin was chosen ahead of Frank Forde to be prime minister.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Donald Horne, 12 February 1966
This recording is an unedited interview with Donald Horne about Sir Robert Menzies. The recording includes mention of Curtin as a wartime prime minister.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Don Rodgers, 12 February 1966
This is a recording of Professor Colin Hughes interviewing Don Rodgers, Press Secretary to both Curtin and Chifley, about prime ministers Curtin and Chifley. Rodgers relates how Curtin as leader united the ALP and comments on Curtin as an orator, his rather withdrawn and reserved character, his skill in handling the press, his good relations with public servants and his style of handling Cabinet.

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Allan Fraser, 14 February 1966
This is a recording of Professor Colin Hughes interviewing Allan Fraser, an ALP MP, about prime ministers Hughes, Lyons, Curtin and Chifley. Fraser recalls Curtin as being one of the top four orators since Federation – Curtin chose his words carefully and delivered with fire and passion, spoke without notes, but could also carefully prepare. Curtin's speech after the battle of the Coral Sea thrilled the House; it was, he said, 'pure English.'

Mr Prime Minister, interview of Frank Forde, 19 February 1966
This is a recording of Frank Forde, Member of the House of Representatives (MHR) for Capricornia (1932–46) and Prime Minister (1945), being interviewed by Professor Colin Hughes about prime ministers Lyons, Curtin and Chifley and about General MacArthur in Australia. Forde recalls how Curtin as leader firmly put his views before the party and Cabinet, and how he had a wide knowledge of party policy and was a great reader. Forde discusses Curtin's reasons for not agreeing to join a national government with the United Australia Party (UAP) and Country Party; the war and the civil construction force; conscription; and Curtin’s New Year message of 1942.

FITZGERALD, TOM. CORRESPONDENCE AND CONVERSATION NOTES, TOM FITZGERALD AND ELSIE MACLEOD, 1975–92

Quantity: 1 file

This series consists of copies of letters and conversation notes exchanged between Fitzgerald and John Curtin's daughter, Elsie Macleod, relating to Tom Fitzgerald's proposed biography of Curtin. As far as possible, the material is arranged chronologically. Items in this series were selected by the JCPML from originals contained in Fitzgerald’s series ‘Research notes for a biography of John Curtin – Files.’

Letter, Elsie Macleod to Margaret and Tom Fitzgerald, 19 December 1984
This item includes an account of the family’s use of nicknames and how her father worried when she was out late.

Letter, Elsie Macleod to Margaret and Tom Fitzgerald, 24 February 1986
This item includes an account of how her father dressed, including his preference for cream suits on casual occasions.

Letter, Elsie Macleod to Margaret and Tom Fitzgerald, 20 September 1989
This item includes an account of how Curtin refused a job offer for his daughter at the ABC so that he could still be free to be critical of the broadcaster when required.

Quantity: 1391 files

Items in this series contain copies, some with accompanying notes, of original records considered for inclusion in the 16-volume publication Documents on Australian Foreign Policy 1937–1949. As each volume contains only a few hundred documents, very few of the thousands of documents copied were published.

This series contains a wide variety of items, including significant World War II documents (eg War Cabinet agenda and minutes from 1939–44). Among the subjects it deals with are major world events such as Hitler’s peace offensive; the fall of France in May 1940; appeals to US President Roosevelt; war crimes; refugees; imperial defence; the League of Nations; postwar planning; Pacific Rim events concerning Japan, New Guinea and Timor; and US interests in the Pacific.

The original records held as copies in this series came from various sources, predominantly the National Archives of Australia, but including the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, the Department of Defence, the National Library of Australia, the Public Record Office (London), the Roosevelt Library (US) and other institutions.

This series is a useful research resource for this important period because it contains all the cables that relate to Australian foreign policy, culled from the entire run of Australian government cable traffic, much of which consists of routine administrative messages from all departments. The material has been arranged by subject, with notes explaining the significance of the documents as necessary.

SER0590

FAIRFAX. JOHN FAIRFAX AND SONS PTY LTD. ‘SYDNEY MORNING HERALD’ ARTICLES BY ROSS GOLLAN, 1941–45

SER0470

Quantity: 196 items

This series comprises typescript copies of weekly columns written by Ross Gollan, Canberra correspondent for the Sydney Morning Herald. The columns cover a wide range of topics and provide contemporary political commentary on the Curtin Government’s handling of the war, international affairs and domestic matters.

[The Labor] Caucus and banks, 3 November 1941

In this article, Gollan writes of the pensions ‘barney’ and of how Curtin and his Cabinet dealt with unrest in the Labor Caucus over the Budget. Gollan also comments on the way the Liberal and Country parties were performing in their new opposition role.

The stand on coal, 20 April 1942

In this article Gollan writes about the:

...bestowal on General MacArthur, as from midnight on Saturday of power to issue orders that are to be taken by Australian forces as emanating from the Commonwealth Government...

He also discusses the need for the Curtin Government to stand firm on implementing new coal regulations and the likely negative reaction of some states to the proposed uniform taxation scheme.

Mr Curtin’s problems, 12 April 1943

Gollan writes of the problems he believes are facing the Curtin Government. These include industrial unrest in the form of the Sydney waterfront dispute, the lag in filling the Third Liberty Loan, Treasurer Chifley’s failings and the possible loss of support from Independent MP Mr Wilson.

Curtin Government showing disregard of public opinion, 9 April 1945

In this article Gollan comments on what he sees as the Curtin Government’s failure to provide timely answers to the question of whether the Australian Imperial Force had adequate equipment for its campaigns in the islands. He also criticises the government for its failure to respond to the changing situation of the war – ‘On man-power and cognate key aspects of the nation’s war-time mobilisation, the Government approaches the problems of 1945 with the formulae of 1942’.

JOYCE, GLADYS. PERSONAL PAPERS, 1942–45

Quantity: 8 items

Gladys Joyce worked as John Curtin’s personal secretary from 1941 until his death in 1945. This series includes a letter of condolence to Mr Joyce (Gladys’ father) from John Curtin and copies of the ‘Orders of Service’ for Curtin’s memorial services in Canberra and the UK. The series also contains a number of photographs of John Curtin and staff taken during the period Miss Joyce worked as Curtin’s secretary, including some taken aboard the Prince of Wales railway carriage.

Typed copy of letter from John Curtin to Mr Joyce, 16 March 1944

In this letter to Mr Joyce, Prime Minister Curtin writes:

War is a frightful calamity. Its general tragedy sweeps into the homes of so many and when its cost includes a loved son the general becomes so personal that it borders on intrusion to just proffer sentiments of grief for those who grieve.

MacKINNON, THELMA. CORRESPONDENCE, 1942

Quantity: 2 items

This series comprises two letters from John Curtin, one to Thelma MacKinnon (nee Southwell) and one to her parents, on the occasion of Thelma’s wedding in 1942.

McCARTHY, THELMA. ANECDOTES, 2002

Quantity: 1 item

This series contains Thelma McCarthy’s anecdotal memory of being invited to dinner at The Lodge, along with three other ‘lowly-ranking WAAF’ [sic] (Women’s Auxiliary Australian Air Force), by Prime Minister Curtin.

Anecdotal memory of meeting John Curtin in 1943, 2002

In this item Mrs McCarthy recounts:

John Curtin was so informal, [he] ushered us into a small sitting room and offered us all a cool drink. He asked us about our families and the work we were currently doing in the WAAF. We then went into the dining room and had Sunday tea, cold meat and salad followed by stewed fruit and custard. So homely and we all relaxed as we talked and laughed together.

McLAUGHLIN, FREDERICK. PERSONAL PAPERS, 1940–95
Quantity: 20 items

Frederick McLaughlin was the departmental Private Secretary to Prime Minister Curtin from 1941 to 1945 and accompanied him overseas in 1944. This series mainly comprises records related to Curtin’s trip to the US, the UK and Canada, and includes correspondence, itineraries, speeches, official papers and financial statements. The series also includes press clippings (1944–95) that relate to John Curtin.

Quantity: 1 item

This series comprises an anecdotal memory of John Curtin and his Cabinet written by James Maher who was on the staff of the Minister for Munitions and the Navy, Norman Makin, from 1943 to 1946.

Anecdotal memory of John Curtin and his Cabinet, 1995
Mr Maher recalls John Curtin and the tension of the War Cabinet room and how the Prime Minister took a personal interest in him, taking him to football matches when Curtin was in Canberra, saying ‘Jim, it will keep you out of trouble.’

MENZIES, ROBERT. CORRESPONDENCE, 1940–41
Quantity: 4 files

This series contains a file of correspondence with John Curtin, John Beasley and Arthur Fadden; press statements and other records relating to the desirability of forming a national government; the composition of the Australian Advisory War Council; and the Opposition’s rejection of the proposal for an all-party government. The series also includes several letters of a more personal nature between Curtin and Menzies.
MORAL RE–ARMAMENT ASSOCIATION. CORRESPONDENCE AND REPORTS, 1942–43

Quantity: 10 items

This series contains a report of the MRA revue You Can Defend Australia, which was performed in Canberra in 1942 as a contribution to national morale, and correspondence of the association, including letters of support for the production of the revue from John Curtin. The MRA grew out of the ‘Oxford Group’, which started among Oxford University students in the late 1920s. In 1938, as nations re-armed for war, its originator, Frank Buchman, called for a ‘moral and spiritual rearmament’ to work towards a ‘hate-free, fear-free, greed-free world.’

Letter from John Curtin to R Abel, 2 September 1942

This item consists of a letter in which Curtin wrote:

The Revue ‘You Can Defend Australia’ which I have had the pleasure of witnessing impressed me very favourably. It not only entertains but it conveys a vital message. I believe that the Revue is a valuable contribution towards the raising of the morale of the nation which is of paramount importance.

Miss Craig describes aspects of the running of the Prime Minister’s Office and her impressions of various prime ministers.

She describes travelling with Prime Minister Curtin by train and in a Lancaster Bomber across the continent to Perth in 1943. Miss Craig also recounts her impressions of Curtin’s relationships with his Press Secretary Don Rodgers, Treasurer Ben Chifley, General Douglas MacArthur, members of the press and others.

Curtin, John Francis. Interview, March-April 2004
JCPML00855/1

John Francis Curtin, son of wartime Prime Minister John Curtin, speaks about the Curtin family home at 24 Jarrad Street, Cottesloe, WA. John Francis Curtin lived in the house from the age of three until he left to join the RAAF in 1941 at the age of twenty. His parents, Elsie and John Curtin, built the house and moved there from Napier Street, also in Cottesloe, in 1923.

The house remained the family home throughout the years John Curtin senior was in Parliament and consequently spent considerable periods of time in Canberra. Additions to the house are discussed as are the decor, furniture and varied use of each room. The garden and outhouses are described, as are family activities in the house and garden area. John Francis Curtin has given insights into life in Cottesloe during the pre-war period and into family life in the Curtin household. He also comments on the personality and character of his Needham grandparents, and more particularly on his parents and his sister.
Davidson, Frank. Interview, 1996
Journalist, editor and Officer-in-Charge of the wartime Department of Information in WA, Frank Davidson recalls John Curtin from the 1920s as a Labor man and editor and then as wartime prime minister.

Ewing, Peter. Interview by Bill Bunbury, 1999
Peter Ewing was a journalist with the West Australian newspaper who met John Curtin in the late 1930s when Curtin attended AJA functions in Perth. Mr Ewing comments on Curtin as a person, a journalist and as a prime minister.

Hanlon, Owen. Interview, 1995
Owen Hanlon joined the ALP when he was 20 years old and for over 40 years he was almost continually an office-holder of the party in WA. He met John Curtin in the 1930s and attended numerous meetings, functions and conferences at which Curtin was present. Mr Hanlon recalls John Curtin as an impressive public speaker and gives his impressions of him as a party leader and prime minister.

Heenan, Joan. Interview, 1995
Joan Heenan recalls her memories of John Curtin and his family at their home in Cottesloe, WA and his visits to Kalgoorlie before and during World War II. She comments on the difficult decisions that John Curtin had to make as Prime Minister during the war and the effect that it had on his health.

Hewitt, Sir Cyrus Lenox. Interview, 16 January 1998
From 1939 to 1946, Lenox Hewitt was Assistant Secretary to Professor Douglas Copland who held the position of Commonwealth Prices Commissioner and was the Special Economic Adviser to the Prime Minister. This interview deals with Hewitt's role in the Commonwealth Public Service and his contact with Curtin. He discusses Curtin as a leader and passionate speaker and his vision for the future of postwar Australia. He compares Curtin with other Australian prime ministers and discusses Curtin's suggestion about establishing a Commonwealth Secretariat and the hostile press coverage of Curtin during the 1943 election. This interview has restricted access at the time of the printing of this guide (2004).

Hodges, Adele. Interview, 2 July 1997
Adele Hodges (nee Mildenhall) worked as John Curtin’s secretary from 1936 to 1941. She recounts her impressions of Curtin as a person and as an employer, and describes the daily running of the office of the Leader of the Opposition. She recounts her first meeting with Curtin when she was being interviewed for the typist position and how Curtin came to regard her with ‘friendly affection as a workmate and collaborator in matters of great moment to our country’ (a quote from a letter Curtin wrote on the occasion of Adele's marriage in 1941).
Hughes, Morris John. Interview, 13 January 1998
John Hughes recounts his early family life and his involvement in the New South Wales ALP in the 1920s. He recalls how members of the Clerks Union in Canberra in the early 1930s considered that listening to Curtin speak in Parliament was ‘the only thing that is worthwhile in Canberra.’

Mr Hughes relates meeting Prime Minister Curtin in the war years on train journeys when Hughes was travelling in his role as President of the NSW Labour Council between Canberra, Melbourne and Sydney and having unplanned talks on mainly personal matters. Mr Hughes speaks of his opposition to the idea of a national government and also recalls an occasion when he approached Curtin as Prime Minister for help in resolving a union matter. He recalls union and ALP politics and John Curtin as a person, as party leader and as a wartime prime minister.

Joyce, Gladys. Interview, 3 July 1997
Miss Joyce worked as John Curtin’s personal secretary from 1941 until his death in 1945. She recalls the day-to-day running of the Prime Minister’s Office, travelling with the Prime Minister by train and a memorable flight to Perth in a Lancaster Bomber, and Curtin as an employer and as prime minister.

Krantz, Harry. Interview, 28 October 1996
Harry Krantz recounts hearing Curtin speak in Adelaide in support of the Labor candidate in the 1941 by-election for the South Australian State seat of Boothby and of meeting Curtin on the tram journey home afterwards.

Mr Krantz recalls that troops in Darwin (c1942), after viewing a Department of Information film, were impressed by Curtin as a man who had no pretensions or airs. He also refers to seeing Curtin again at an all-unions conference held at Trades Hall Melbourne in 1943.

Lane, Beverley. Interview, 1998
Beverley Lane is the daughter of Elsie Macleod and granddaughter of John Curtin. The interview concerns the Curtin family home at 24 Jarrad Street, Cottesloe.

Leckie, Rena. Interview, 21 October 1998
Rena Leckie worked as a cashier at the Boans cafeteria in Perth and remembers John Curtin lunching there regularly while he was Leader of the Opposition. She recalls meeting with Curtin at Parliament House, Canberra in 1944 and being invited to The Lodge next day for lunch and having ‘roast lamb and mint sauce – which was lovely – and apple pie and cream.’

Lewington, Len. Interview, 16 June 2000
South Fremantle identity, Len Lewington, recalls John Curtin as a visitor to his family home in the 1920s. He remembers that as a young lad he helped with election campaigns for the seat of Fremantle, and recalls enjoying an old-fashioned picnic at Rockingham for the workers to celebrate Curtin’s electoral win in 1928 and other events.
Mackay, Malcolm. Interview, 1995
Dr Malcolm Mackay met John Curtin in 1943 when Mackay came to Canberra to take part in a musical revue organised by the MRA (You Can Defend Australia), which aimed to strengthen the morale of Australians in the face of the trials and tribulations of the war. Dr Mackay relates how Curtin invited Ivan Menzies and himself into his private office for a talk and shared some of his concerns on personal matters and on the war and home fronts.

MacKinnon, Thelma. Interview, 30 May to 4 June 2002
Thelma MacKinnon (nee Southwell) recalls her childhood and school days at Fern Hill near Canberra and remembers John Curtin as a friend to her family and, in particular, to her father, Fred, his brother Jack and sister Belle. Mrs MacKinnon recounts how she met Mr Curtin in 1940 when he was staying at the Kurrajong Hotel in Canberra, where her Aunt Isabella ('Belle') Southwell worked as manageress. She discusses her marriage to Owen MacKinnon in 1942 (Curtin attended her wedding) and recalls the time she worked in the office at the Kurrajong from 1942–43. Mrs MacKinnon relates details of the life of her Aunt Belle, in particular her time as manageress of various Canberra hotels.

McLaughlin–Ross family. Interview, 26 October 1996
Members of the family of Frederick McLaughlin, who was John Curtin's Principal Private Secretary, recall their memories and impressions of John Curtin and recount information about Curtin related to them by Mr McLaughlin. Interviewees are Mr McLaughlin's wife, Hilda, his daughters, Hilda 'Maurine' Fraser and Barbara Ross, and his son-in-law Charles 'Bill' Ross.

McNamara, John. Interview, 1995
John McNamara recalls Curtin from the 1920s as a good friend of his father, Dinny McNamara, a long-time Federal Secretary for the ALP, for whom Curtin had been best man. Mr McNamara recalls chatting to Curtin after the Prime Minister had picked up the phone at the Victoria Coffee Palace in Melbourne when he called to contact his father. He relates how Curtin sent a letter of congratulations and cheque on the occasion of his marriage in late 1944, at a time when Curtin was ill in Mercy Hospital in East Melbourne and his general impressions of Curtin as a person and as prime minister.

Mann, Frederick. Interview, 29 November 1997
Frederick Mann knew John Curtin through his father, a staunch Labor supporter and Curtin's campaign manager for the 1934 election. Curtin was a frequent visitor to the Mann family home and Mr Mann recalls helping with election campaigns as a young lad and attending many of Curtin's campaign meetings. He recalls two of Curtin's favourite terms – ‘fiduciary issue’ and ‘trogolodytes’. Mr Mann also recounts how in 1927 he played cricket for Cottesloe Beach against ‘Jack’ Curtin who was playing for Cottesloe Cricket Club.

Mayor, Chris. Interview, 1995

Chris Mayor’s mother Beryl Bryant was involved in the production of the MRA musical revue You Can Defend Australia, which was performed in 1944 with the aim of helping Australians find greater moral strength, courage and backbone. Mr Major recalls seeing John Curtin watch the revue in Melbourne and Curtin’s support for the revue being performed before parliamentarians in Canberra.

Paul, George. Interview, 1995

George Paul describes meeting John Curtin in the early 1930s. He talks about Curtin’s patriotism, his wartime leadership, conscription and the US alliance. He suggests that Curtin was an early republican and describes the day of John Curtin’s funeral.

Prickett, Arthur. Interview, 1998

Arthur Prickett commenced work with the Westralian Worker in 1928 as an apprentice compositor, under John Curtin’s sponsorship. Mr Prickett’s sister, Florence, also worked for the newspaper and John Curtin attended Mr Prickett’s wedding in 1937. Mr Prickett remembers working at the Westralian Worker and John Curtin as a person.

‘Parliament in session’, 1944
Title No: 14243
This newsreel has five segments – ‘Exterior Parliament House, Canberra’ (Title No: 76083), ‘Parliament in session (Title No: 76084), ‘Prime Minister addressing Cabinet’ (Title No: 76085), ‘Prime Minister Curtin’ (Title No: 76086) and ‘Prime Minister’s Lodge’ (Title No: 76087). An access copy is available.
Vote No: The 1944 Fourteen Points Referendum, 1944
The ‘Fourteen Points Referendum’ was held on legislation proposed by the Curtin Government to allow the Federal Parliament to have the power (for five years) to make laws in respect of fourteen specified matters. These matters included the rehabilitation of ex-servicemen, national health, family allowances and Indigenous Australians. As the proposed legislation – the ‘Constitution Alteration (Post-War Reconstruction and Democratic Rights) Bill’ – required a change to the Constitution, the matter was decided by referendum.

This film, produced by opponents of the legislation, contains anti-Curtin Government rhetoric:
- We are fighting this war for liberty – for our individual liberty – yours and mine – for the right to live and plan our own lives the way we want to – or do you desire regimentation and restrictions to continue after the war?

The film is directed at the emotions (particularly the fears) of the viewers rather than their minds. The audience is asked to vote ‘No’ to postwar regimentation and postwar bureaucracy and thereby vote for personal liberty. The referendum returned a ‘No’ vote. An access copy is available.

Vote Yes for Australia [01], 1944
This film segment contains images of Robert Menzies and Arthur Fadden, with a voiceover stating:
- No sooner had Menzies and Fadden demanded that the Commonwealth should have postwar powers to check profiteering and to control combines and monopolies than big vested interests cracked the whip. Menzies and Fadden promptly somersaulted. Today, they ask you to vote against national powers.

The film is concerned with some of the ‘Fourteen Points’ and calls for people to vote ‘Yes’. The Curtin Government sponsored the proposals and Dr Herbert Vere Evatt, the Federal Attorney-General, made every effort to inform electors. Menzies and Fadden worked hard to defeat the proposals. An access copy is available in ‘Second Victory Loan – cinema advertisement [other segments]’, which is accessioned as Title No: 10717.

This newsreel shows Prince Henry, the Duke of Gloucester, and Princess Alice, the Duchess of Gloucester, being greeted in Sydney by Lord Mayor Alderman Harding and federal and state ministers.

These include other Dominion prime ministers, President Roosevelt, Richard Gardiner Casey, Sir Archibald Wavell, Dr Earle Page, Frank Forde, Clement Attlee, Ronald Cross and Arthur Fadden. The telegrams are arranged chronologically and provide a fascinating view of Australian–British and Churchill–Curtin relations during the war years. The series also contains a small amount of other material, such as newspaper clippings and reports, which refer to Curtin.

Telegram from the President of the United States [Franklin Roosevelt] to Winston Churchill, 21 February 1942

Reciting the text of his message to John Curtin, Roosevelt promises American troops and naval protection for Australia, emphasises the strategic importance of Burma and appeals for the diversion of [the 7th] Australian Division to Burma.

Telegram from John Curtin to Winston Churchill marked ‘Most Secret’, 31 July 1942

This telegram discusses the use of Australian troops in the Middle East. It includes comments on the review by the British Chiefs of Staff and on the threat to Australia from the Japanese. In the telegram Curtin agrees to extend the temporary retention of the Australian 9th Division in the Middle East and to provide two months’ worth of reinforcements. He also comments on the need to develop air strength in Australia and states that the agreement for 9th Division to remain in Middle East is conditional on measures being taken to ensure the allotment of aircraft.

Telegram from Winston Churchill to Prime Minister of Australia marked ‘Most Secret and Personal’, 10 December 1942

In this telegram Churchill comments about the arrangements to return the 9th Division to Australia from the Middle East and on plans to make two more aircraft carriers available in the Pacific.

Telegram from Winston Churchill to John Curtin marked ‘Secret and Personal’, 17 July 1943

In this telegram Churchill asks Curtin to guard against disclosures of controversial material during the forthcoming general election and to try to prevent questioning of the Allies’ policies.
Telegram from John Curtin to Winston Churchill marked 'Most Secret and Personal', 19 July 1943
In this telegram Curtin discusses the forthcoming Australian federal election, stating it should be a purely domestic affair. He comments on a report by Robert Menzies, in which he criticises the Curtin Government for not sending an AIF division to Burma, and asks for more information on this report.

Telegram from Winston Churchill to John Curtin marked 'Most Secret and Personal', 11 November 1943
In this telegram, Churchill states that he is very glad that 'His Majesty King George VI has given his permission to HRH the Duke of Gloucester becoming the Governor-General of Australia.'

Telegram from the Prime Minister of Australia to Winston Churchill marked 'Most Secret and Personal', 4 March 1944
In this telegram Curtin asks Churchill for a detailed account of decisions reached at the Sextant Conference in Cairo before he leaves Australia. Curtin also asks that Churchill advise him of the opinion of his naval advisers regarding possible Japanese incursions into the Indian Ocean.

Telegram from Winston Churchill to the Prime Minister of Australia marked 'Most Secret and Personal', 11 March 1944
In this telegram Churchill informs Curtin that the British Chiefs of Staff have been investigating the most effective contribution British forces could make towards the defeat of the Japanese. Churchill states that this has resulted in two proposals – first, that Britain would use the bulk of her naval force across the Indian Ocean against the Malay barrier, using India as its main base; or, secondly, that Britain would send these forces, along with land and air forces, to the South-West Pacific Area, using Australia as its main base. He suggests that a small party of administrative experts should be sent to Australia to study its potential as a base.

John Curtin’s report to the Australian Parliament of the prime ministers’ meeting in London in May 1944
This report explains the purpose of the Imperial Conference of Empire Prime Ministers and comments on the war with Germany and Japan. It also describes foreign policy in relation to the conduct of the war and discusses future world organisations and improved machinery for Empire cooperation. It goes on to describe the views of the governments of other nations and comments on various economic, social and transport questions. The report is annotated.

Papers in this collection deal with the British agencies such as Ministry of Production (during World War II) and the Board of Trade and the Treasury (both in the postwar period). Other material deals with the European Recovery Program (known variously as the Marshall Plan, Marshall Aid or the Marshall Program) and the Organisation for European Cooperation and Development. These papers contain some material relevant to John Curtin and Australia.

Ministry of Production – Australia as a base – ‘Top Secret’ memo, 1944

In October 1943 Curtin asked the British Government for its views on the desirable distribution of effort of available Australian manpower between the armed forces, munitions production, food production and so on. This file is concerned with answering this question, assisted by a report compiled by a British press delegation to Australia in October to November 1943. A copy of the 17-page report is included in this item.

Commonwealth leaders meet at Empire Conference
[Imperial Conference of Empire Prime Ministers], 5 June 1944
WPN 161 II
This film shows the leaders of British Commonwealth countries meeting in London for the Imperial Conference of Empire Prime Ministers held in May 1944. Various scenes are shown, including official cars parked outside No. 10 Downing Street, London; British Prime Minister Churchill talking to Field Marshal Jan Smuts (Prime Minister of South Africa) in the gardens of No. 10 Downing Street; and the four Dominion prime ministers (Field Marshal Smuts, William Lyon Mackenzie King, John Curtin and Peter Fraser) sitting at a table with Winston Churchill at the start of the conference. The commentary outlines the main points of a declaration signed by Churchill and the Dominion prime ministers in which they reiterate their inflexible resolve to continue the war until the defeat of the enemy has been achieved and the agony of mankind is ended. The film runs for 1 minute, 15 seconds.

The General Secretary’s papers – death, telegrams from MP [sic] and Clement Attlee to Secretary of the Australian Labor Party on death of John Curtin, 5 July 1945

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

The National Archives incorporates the UK Public Record Office and the Historical Manuscripts Commission. Its records catalogue can be viewed online (www.catalogue.nationalarchives.gov.uk). The National Archives holds material about Curtin collected from the Cabinet Office, the British Foreign Office and the Dominions Office. The records listed below are available online through the JCPML ERA.

Material in the Prime Minister’s Office records is available on microfilm. A copy of ‘Churchill at war: the Prime Minister’s Office papers, 1940-45’, which contains PREM 3 and PREM 4, can be viewed at the National Library of Australia (accession number mfm G27767–28057). The following material is ordered by accession number.

CABINET OFFICE – MINISTER OF DEFENCE SECRETARIAT – RECORDS, 1938–47

This series consists of the files of the Military Secretariat of the Cabinet Office for the period that Churchill and Attlee successively combined the offices of Prime Minister and Minister of Defence. The files reflect the personal direction of the war and its aftermath over the whole range of issues in which the minister involved himself and the machinery through which he operated.

Mr Curtin, June 1944 – January 1945

This item mainly comprises telegrams between Churchill and Curtin.

DOMINIONS OFFICE AND COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS OFFICE – ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE, 1915–71

This series comprises the general records of the Dominions Office, which are concerned with relations within British Commonwealth nations. This series includes some records created by this agency’s successor bodies – the Commonwealth Relations Office and Commonwealth Office.

Illness and death of prominent citizens – Australia (Mr John Curtin), 1945
FOREIGN OFFICE – POLITICAL DEPARTMENTS – GENERAL
CORRESPONDENCE, 1906–66

Records in this series contain correspondence and other material. The Foreign Office’s political departments, which included the Political Intelligence Department (1939–46) and some of the joint Foreign Office/Commonwealth Relations Office departments, created these records. Subjects covered include the UK’s political, trade and other relations with states and territories outside the British colonial empire; Dominion territories and Commonwealth states; international defence organisations; the League of Nations; the United Nations and its subsidiary bodies; international economic organisations; and the Council of Europe, the Baghdad Pact and the South Pacific Commission.

War preparation against Japan, 1941
This item contains a copy of a telegram from the UK High Commissioner in Australia regarding the dangerous position Australia would be in if the Japanese were to attack.

Australian affairs, 1941

United States – views on colonial policy, 1942
This item contains a copy of telegram from the UK High Commissioner in Australia about Australian ideas on their country’s future role in the South-West Pacific Area and in South-East Asia.

Committee on American opinion and the British Empire, 1943
This item contains a report from General Ewing, UK Army Liaison Staff, Australia on relations between Australian and American forces.

Committee on American opinion and the British Empire, 1943
This item contains a report by General Ewing and notes by Lieutenant-Colonel Sanford, who writes that the ‘United States troops in Australia are definitely unpopular with the Australian troops’.

United States–Australian relations, 1943
This item contains statements and cablegrams about the deteriorating relations between Australia and USA – ‘There are strong reactions against the consequence of an army of occupation.’

Australia–New Zealand Agreement, 1944
This item contains a copy of an address by Prime Minister Curtin to members of the Empire Parliamentary Association, House of Commons, Westminster, on 17 May 1944.

American opinion and the British Empire, 1944
This item contains extracts from an article in the New York Times reporting remarks made by prime ministers Curtin and Fraser about the Australia–New Zealand Agreement, along with UK reaction to it.
Political situation – consular reports, 1944
This item contains a San Francisco consular report that includes comments on Mr Curtin’s brief visit to San Francisco, which ‘appears to have been a great success.’

Australian affairs, 1944
This item includes copies of Australian Current Notes on International Affairs, produced by the Department of External Affairs, Canberra, for October 1943 to April 1944; copies of dispatches from the UK High Commissioner, Canberra providing overviews of internal affairs in Australia (1943–44); and a report from the UK High Commissioner about the Triennial ALP Conference held in Canberra in December 1943. The latter report notes that the: …outstanding feature of the Conference was Mr Curtin’s speech which was devoted to an appeal to the Labor Party to abandon its policy of isolation and the development of his suggestions for closer Empire collaboration.

Suggestions for improvement in methods of inter-Commonwealth collaboration and consultation on foreign affairs, 1944

Australian diplomatic representation abroad – immigration to Australia, 1945
The item contains copies of dispatches, telegrams and other material from the UK High Commissioner, Canberra, about internal affairs in Australia between May and October 1945.

Items in this series contain correspondence and other material created by the Treaty Department and its successor agencies. Subjects covered include treaty correspondence with other countries; shipping claims arising from the Russo–Japanese war; honours and decorations; territorial waters; extradition treaties; nationality; consular and diplomatic appointments; diplomatic privileges; civil procedure; deportation agreements; and various royal matters, including state and royal visits.

MacARTHUR MEMORIAL LIBRARY AND ARCHIVES

The MacArthur Memorial Library and Archives (MML&A) holds the official and personal papers of General Douglas MacArthur. Highlights of the collection are its photographs and materials relating to World War II and the Korean War. The library also holds the papers of his subordinate generals, US veterans and acquaintances of General MacArthur.

The collection is arranged into Record Groups (RGs). The JCPML holds microfilm copies of material relating to John Curtin from RG 3 and RG 4, which are described below. Photographs and listed items from RGs 5, 10 and 27 are also available online on JCPML ERA.

RECORDS OF HEADQUARTERS, SOUTH–WEST PACIFIC AREA (SWPA), 1942–45

Quantity: 100 feet (also on microfilm)

This record group contains material gathered by General MacArthur's personal staff during 1942–45. The documents comprise intelligence documents, operations plans, correspondence, messages, orders, geographic surveys, captured documents, interrogation reports and historical index cards. Most of the messages (radiograms) for this period are located in RG 4.

Elsie Curtin, wife of Australia’s wartime Prime Minister John Curtin, was born in Ballarat, Victoria on 4 October 1890, one of three children and the only daughter of Abraham Needham and Annie (nee Hosking). Her father, Abraham, born near Colac in Victoria in July 1860, earned his living as a painter and sign writer but was dependent on the goldmining industry for the more specialised aspects of his work in gold-leaf and wood-graining. When the demand for these services declined in the mid-1890s, he migrated to South Africa, returning for his family two years later in 1898 with businesses successfully established in Johannesburg and Cape Town.

In South Africa Elsie was educated at Woodstock in the Cape Town area and she recalled her childhood as ‘exceptionally happy.’ Most of her interests are said to have centred on the Church – her mother’s parents had been devout members of the Primitive Methodist Church – and she played the organ at the Methodist Church in Cape Town.

At an early age Elsie had also become interested in politics through discussions with her father who had, after moving away to some extent from his earlier strict Methodist views and experiences as preacher in the Victorian countryside, become a foundation member in 1904 of the Cape Town Social Democratic Federation and then the editor of a socialist newspaper. Elsie herself joined the federation three years later at the age of 17, but at this stage she also seems to have maintained her strong commitment to Methodism, including signing the pledge to abstain from alcohol and dancing.

Both in South Africa and then in Tasmania, Elsie had numerous opportunities over the years to discuss topical political issues and absorb socialist values through the commitment of her father. Her mother was also an important influence, giving active support to the suffragette cause in South Africa.

Evidence of the strength of Abraham Needham’s conversion to what had become his new religion of socialism can be found in the pages of various issues of the Cape Socialist. In one issue, one of the paper’s journalists suggested that it was Needham’s ‘strong personality and whole hearted advocacy on all occasions of Socialism’ that was largely ‘instrumental in the great success of the movement here.’ At the time the paper was seeking funds for Needham’s defence against charges that led to him being gaoled for a few days following an outbreak of looting in the wake of a meeting of unemployed workers.

Needham himself had a passion for writing poetry and on this occasion he likened the role of socialist reformers to that of the early Christians as:

…the prophets, priests and kings of hope and liberty for men…who fought a fight for Truth and Right."

On other occasions he proclaimed that ‘Christ of Nazareth is my standard’ and that Christ was a symbol of ‘the vast toiling masses’. Elsie subsequently recalled that ‘night after night’ her father:

…burned the midnight oil while he studied, read or wrote articles for his papers and his poems: the latter he had published in one volume."

When the Needhams returned to Hobart in 1908 (leaving one son in Cape Town), Abraham established another sign-writing business as well as completing a course in economics and studying astronomy and phrenology. Elsie, for her part, assisted with the business accounts and also with duties such as embroidering union banners. The family seems to have enjoyed a full social life with music as one of the main forms of entertainment – Elsie enjoyed playing the piano even though she had only one year’s tuition – and it was into this environment that John Curtin was introduced in 1912 when he came to Tasmania in his capacity as the newly-appointed Secretary of the Victorian Timber Workers’ Union.

It is not surprising that Curtin and Needham established an easy rapport as friends and colleagues given the manner in which each had moved from organised religion to a passionate reforming advocacy of socialism. The circumstances of the first meeting between the 27-year-old Curtin and Needham’s 22-year-old daughter are still unclear but perhaps the most likely version is that in May 1912 Curtin was invited back to the Needham home following a day spent sailing with Abraham and one of his sons. Reference to a number of other visits to the Needham home, walks in the evening (ostensibly to pursue the family interest in astronomy) and entries in Elsie’s autograph book urging her to read and educate herself for the cause, all attest that the relationship quickly developed even if there was little indication at this stage of romantic interest between the two.

These sentiments were clearly evident when, on his return to Melbourne, Curtin wrote to Needham thanking him for the fellowship of his family:

All the time I was in Hobart I never scrupled to avail myself of the good companionship and friendly chatter which Mrs Needham and Elsie in keeping with your self seem to have so big a monopoly of."

Then again in the following month he wrote of ‘…the silly chats, the laughing hours and the right good fun we knocked out of the daily round…’, while likening Abraham to men like Tom Mann, ‘…now gone, or far away, who showed me the road and bade me march to the end.”

In this regard, David Day has suggested that Needham in many respects filled the gap in Curtin’s life left with the departure overseas of Mann, whom he describes as Curtin’s mentor and father-figure.
Curtin visited Elsie and the Needham family again in March 1913 while in Hobart for a union conference and, according to Elsie, the couple ‘went to a couple of shows together.’ She also attended a couple of political meetings at which he spoke. By this time Curtin was writing to Elsie personally but references to romance and marriage were confined to the occasional oblique reference as when he suggested that:

One of these days I’ll advertise for a companion ‘affectionate disposition, very domestic not too musical desiring someone to support.’

Curtin saw Elsie again in Melbourne in 1914 when she was on her way to South Africa to visit her brother and friends. While she was in Melbourne, the two attended numerous Victorian Socialist Party meetings, which embraced musical items and lectures as well as political discussions. Just before she was due to leave, Curtin proposed marriage to her on St Kilda Beach and she accepted, although no formal engagement was announced and no ring given. In Elsie’s own words, ‘I would have given anything to be able to grab my baggage from the hold and run down the gang-plank again.’

Elsie’s return from South Africa in November 1915 coincided with one of the more difficult stages in Curtin’s life, centred on his resignation from his post as Secretary of the Timber Workers’ Union. Writing to ‘My Elsie’ to explain his decision, he suggested that:

Because I love you better than all else in the world I am fully resolved to no longer mess round in the swirl of nothingness, that means I have decided definitely and decisively to work under such circumstances as will permit the living of a rational existence...

Oh Elsie Dearest like Hamlet ‘I love you best O Most best’...Beyond & above everything I offer you my whole life, hopes for happiness, work and being...until time ends and nothing is.”

Throughout 1916, while Curtin battled his disillusionment with the response of the workers to the socialist message and his own devil of alcoholism, his relationship with Elsie continued through correspondence, but even when he visited Hobart in November he was still not financially in a position to make firm wedding plans.

However, his appointment as editor of the Westralian Worker and the subsequent move to Perth in February 1917 removed the major financial obstacle and on 21 April, a week after Elsie’s arrival in Perth, they were married by arrangement with the Registrar-General in the dining room of a house in West Leederville owned by a Justice of the Peace (JP), Mr Penna. They had only two guests (both witnesses from the Westralian Worker) and no honeymoon to follow. Indeed, according to Elsie, after ‘tea and cakes’ at ‘the old Moana Café’, the newly married couple spent their wedding afternoon sitting in a rented house in West Leederville waiting for their furniture to arrive, and the next evening she accompanied her husband to a political meeting.

In the months that followed Curtin threw himself into his editorial work (sending more than a quarter of his salary to his parents each week) and into political meetings, which culminated in the successful campaign against the second conscription referendum, while Elsie adapted to her new life. On 30 December 1917 she gave birth prematurely to their first...
1919 was a difficult year for the Curtins. On 25 March Curtin’s father died in Melbourne but he was unable to attend the funeral (in September 1938 Curtin attended, with his brothers and sisters, the funeral of their mother following her death a few weeks short of her eighty-seventh birthday). Four weeks later came the death from influenza of Frank Hyett, said to be “the closest male friend Curtin ever had.”

These personal tragedies, and a humiliating defeat as the Australian Labor Party (ALP) candidate for the seat of Perth in the House of Representatives in December, contributed to a breakdown diagnosed as neurasthenia that forced Curtin to take several months’ rest before he could resume anything like his normal hectic schedule. Fortunately for Elsie, her parents had sold their home in Hobart and moved across the country to live with the Curtin family in the home they had rented since July 1917 – No. 3 Napier Street in the beachside suburb of Cottesloe.

In addition to providing an additional source of domestic comfort for Elsie, Abraham was able on many occasions to fill in for Curtin by writing leaders (including an important editorial in Easter 1920 in which, in sympathy with Curtin’s views at the time, he wrote that ‘reformist methods cannot avail’) and other articles for the Westralian Worker.

Looking back, Elsie was to describe Curtin’s moods in this period as veering between ‘high optimism and deep melancholy, as inexplicable as they were irregular.’

The Curtin’s second child, John Francis (named in memory of Frank Hyett), was born on 31 January 1921 and the expanded family moved down the road to No. 15 Napier Street, a house purchased with financial assistance from Abraham, who was to die from a heart attack the following year. According to Elsie, his death was:

…a big personal loss to John as well as to me. In the three years my father lived with us, he and John had consolidated the instinctive liking for one another they had felt, when they first met in 1912. They had become more like brothers.

In February 1923 John and Elsie bought a block of land (registered in Elsie’s name only) in Jarrad Street, Cottesloe on which local builder Arnold Bullock erected for them a four-roomed brick home with surrounding verandas on three sides (though ‘as time went by the verandahs [sic] gradually disappeared into enclosures – as so often happens with verandahs’
), which remained the family home for the rest of their lives. Elsie’s mother, Annie Needham, also moved with them and remained until her death in 1944.

Settled in their own home, the Curtin family would often spend the evening around the piano after eating one of Elsie’s plain-cooked meals, with Cornish pasties as a specialty. 91
While music, including singing in choirs such as the Subiaco Choral Society, continued to be an important part of Elsie’s life, family sources indicate that neither she nor her husband attended any church after their marriage and neither of the children was christened. 92 On the political front, during the 1920s Elsie became increasingly active in the Labor Women’s Organisation (LWO). She was a member in the Perth area for several years and in 1924 she came the founding Treasurer of the Fremantle LWO. She also served on the committee responsible for building the Cottesloe Infant Health Clinic.

After one more unsuccessful election campaign in 1925, and a number of absences from home as he travelled around Australia with the Royal Commission on Child Endowment and Family Allowances, John Curtin finally succeeded at his fourth attempt to enter federal politics, winning the seat of Fremantle in November 1928. Elsie and the children accompanied him to Canberra in January 1929, the first time since her marriage (apart from visits to hospital to have her two children) that she had been away from home ‘for even one night.’93 The family stayed at the Wellington Hotel with the children attending Telopea Park School for a term, allowing Elsie to be present for her husband’s maiden speech on 14 February before they returned to Perth in April. The family again accompanied him to Canberra in November 1929 when the newly-elected Scullin Government met in Parliament for the first time (though without Curtin in the Cabinet) and then stayed on until Christmas morning.

Two years later in December 1931, Curtin fought his third election in four years and along with many of his colleagues was crushingly defeated and left unemployed for several months. In this context his daughter recalls the family folding up the pile of campaign pamphlets and distributing the material around the surrounding streets while their father delivered up to three speeches in one night at three different halls.94 Elsie accepted the changed circumstances philosophically, not the least because Curtin’s drinking problem, if not entirely solved, was at least much less obvious, and she had her husband involved in trips to the local cinema, growing zinnias and playing cricket in the front garden with their son, John.

Working for a time as a freelance journalist, Curtin also acted as a sports writer with the Westralian Worker, providing racing tips for the paper and reporting on football matches, which he attended with his son. He and Elsie also received income from a house they had built across the road from their own and which they rented out, as well as from paid work for the ALP prior to Curtin’s appointment by the Collier Government in 1933 to chair the committee drawing up the Western Australia’s submission to the Commonwealth Grants Commission.

Back in federal politics after regaining Fremantle for the ALP in 1934, Curtin became Leader of the Opposition on 4 October 1935, Elsie’s forty-fifth birthday, and henceforth he could usually manage only the occasional fortnight at home. By this time their daughter Elsie was working as a stenographer and had joined the Young Labor League but her brother was still at secondary school. For their father, communications with his children were difficult – as evidenced by his letters to his son, including one written in October 1936 cautioning him against neglecting his study for sport:

It is vital you attend practice for cricket...[b]ut practice for manhood and its jobs is also imperative."

Elsie also found that communications with her husband during his absences were now much more frequently through the telephone rather than the bi-weekly letters that had been his practice previously."

In the political limelight herself far more than before, Elsie travelled by sea in April 1936 to meet her husband in Adelaide and they then visited Melbourne, Hobart and Launceston before she went with him to the Hotel Kurrajong in Canberra for what she described as a ‘second honeymoon’ (or, on occasions, as their ‘proper honeymoon’). Increasingly, Elsie’s role was to manage the household financially as well as performing ‘more traditional wifely tasks’. As Elsie herself explained the situation:

...some women are more fitted to work outside the home, and others were more suited to looking after their families and households."

At the same time this comment underplays the role she came to play in the Fremantle electorate with her husband’s increasingly lengthy absences in the east as well as her ongoing involvement with the LWO.
With the outbreak of war in 1939, Curtin’s absences became even more prolonged, though he did call by phone ‘every second day or something like that’ and he also wrote regularly until he became Prime Minister. In October 1940, shortly after her husband’s narrow re-election for Fremantle in September 1940, Elsie was given a fiftieth birthday party by the LWO but Curtin had been delayed in Canberra and at the time was midway across the Nullarbor. However, Elsie returned with him to Canberra and stayed there until just before Christmas.

On 3 October 1941, the day before her fifty-first birthday, Elsie received a telegram from Curtin informing her of a highly significant ‘birthday present’ with the decision of the two independents to support the ALP in bringing down the Fadden Government. Curtin told her that while he would move into The Lodge, he wanted her to retain their Cottesloe home and not leave either the home or the family indefinitely. At that stage Elsie still had her mother living with her and her daughter was working in Perth, although her son John was stationed with the Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF) at Geraldton, Western Australia.

Elsie herself went to Canberra at the end of the month for her first stay at The Lodge but when the outbreak of war with Japan prevented Curtin’s return to Perth for the rest of the year, he sent a telegram to her pointing out that this would be the first Christmas since their marriage that they had not spent together. Subsequently, Elsie established a wartime pattern of travelling by rail to Canberra twice a year, spending two or three months at The Lodge each time. Looking back she suggested that it had been:

…a rather difficult time for me when I first went over there. It was strange for me to have such a big place to run, and well-meaning people confused me by telling me what I should do, what I should wear [including having her hair ‘permed’] and how I should act as the Prime Minister’s wife.

However she suggested that the entertaining was ‘mostly quite informal’ in the context of wartime exigencies and that she was ‘very fortunate’ in their choice of housekeeper. As it was, throughout the war – and while not breaching confidentiality requirements – Curtin from time to time confided some of his doubts and anxieties to her, as in January 1942 when he wrote:

The war goes very badly and I have a cable fight with Churchill almost every day…The truth is that Britain never thought Japan would fight and made no preparations to meet that eventuality.

During Elsie’s visit to Canberra in April 1942, the couple celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary and later in the year they made a special visit to an old friend, Dame Mary Gilmore, in Sydney on the occasion of her seventy-seventh birthday. Curtin also came to Perth with Elsie in late October to attend the wedding of their daughter Elsie to Cottesloe dentist William Cole on 4 November.

Apart from duties such as launching ships and carrying out a great deal of day-to-day electorate work, Elsie assisted her husband and performed an interesting and perhaps not surprising role when, through the press, she delivered ‘austerity hints to the nation’ concerning how to overcome shortages of food and clothing. The hints included admonitions to use fresh rather than tinned food, to buy cheaper cuts of meat and dress them ‘skillfully’, to hand-knit socks and to go without stockings.
In 1944, following a last-minute request from her husband, Elsie made her first overseas trip since visiting South Africa in 1914, accompanying Curtin to the United States (US) and Canada, though not to London, an omission which led Elsie to suggest:

I was dumped. I was very cross about it. There were eight men in the plane and they didn’t want me because I was a woman.

On the other hand, her daughter Elsie has indicated that she was told by her mother that her father ‘was concerned’ about them both being in the plane together in case the plane crashed.

The initial trip across the Pacific to the US by sea was marred by Elsie’s adverse reaction to smallpox vaccinations. Curtin ‘scarcely left her side for two days’, leading one journalist to suggest ‘it is hard to imagine a more devoted couple.’ On arrival in San Francisco, they were met by Sir Owen Dixon, Australian Minister in Washington, at what Elsie described as a ‘wonderful welcome, with band and red carpet and all.’ In Washington Elsie met Eleanor Roosevelt (she had been in Perth when the President’s wife was in Canberra in September 1943) and they flew together to South Carolina to meet with President Roosevelt. In later years they maintained a friendship by correspondence.

Back in Washington Elsie gave a press conference at which the 20 female journalists present were said to have been intrigued to discover that the Prime Minister’s wife did her own housework and shopping. After her husband’s departure to London, Elsie stayed in Washington at Sir Owen Dixon’s residence before travelling by train to Ottawa, Canada, arriving a few hours before Curtin’s return. As previously mentioned, Elsie’s own health had been the main cause for concern during the early stages of the trip, but Curtin had been unwell for a few days while in Washington and Elsie noted when she saw her husband in Canada that he seemed tired and his hair was ‘whiter and thinner.’ Arriving back in Australia in July, Elsie gave a farewell reception for the Governor-General’s wife, Lady Gowrie, and then returned to Perth for her mother’s birthday. Her mother was to die only a few months later on 5 September 1944 at the age of 86. When Curtin was admitted to Melbourne’s Mercy Hospital in November following a heart attack, he persuaded his wife (to whom he wrote regularly every week while he was in hospital) and daughter to stay in Perth until after son John’s wedding to Catherine Neill at the Ross Memorial Presbyterian Church in West Perth on 9 December 1944. His daughter Elsie then came over and visited Curtin each day until he left hospital in late December and accompanied him back to The Lodge where he was later joined by his wife. He returned to his prime ministerial duties on 22 January.

Still not fully aware of the gravity of her husband’s illness, Elsie stayed on in Canberra except for a visit to Adelaide to open the interstate Labor Women’s Conference on 12 February 1945. After another heart attack in April that year and a short stay in a private hospital in Canberra, Curtin returned to The Lodge, was carried upstairs to his bedroom and ‘never came down again alive.’ For a time he tried to keep up with the news by reading the papers but ‘after a while he didn’t ask for them.’ His son John visited him in June and was there when he died in his sleep in the early hours of 5 July just a few hours before his daughter was scheduled to fly over from Perth in a RAAF bomber.

Elsie and son John were the chief mourners at the memorial service in Canberra while daughter Elsie remained in Perth to join them for the funeral there. Soon after Curtin’s death, the House of Representatives granted Elsie a pension of £500 per year in recognition of the fact that she could have expected ‘years of financial security and the association of her husband.’

In the years that followed Elsie continued to live in her Cottesloe home, the ownership of which was transferred to her daughter in 1948. Elected as the Western Australian President of the LWO in 1944, she continued to serve in that position until September 1946, after which she maintained her active association with the organisation. During the war she had also served on the Central Council of the Red Cross Society and been patron of the Cottesloe Surf Life-Saving Club. In 1949 she returned to Canberra for the laying of the foundation stone of the John Curtin School of Medical Research, staying at The Lodge as a guest of Prime Minister Chifley and his wife.

She also visited New Zealand and on her way home had lunch and dinner at The Lodge as the guest of the newly-elected incumbent, Prime Minister Robert Menzies and his wife. In an unusual move for her, she participated in Dr Evatt’s successful campaign in the by-then marginal seat of Barton. Other awards and activities included being made a JP in 1955, sitting on the Married Women’s Court, acting as a visitor to Fremantle Prison and life membership of several organisations, including the Perth Branch of the Association of Civilian Widows, the Royal Association of Justices, the Women’s Justices Association and the Fremantle LWO.

Among Elsie’s other interests would be numbered membership of the Women’s Christian Temperance Union, the Cottesloe Women’s Service Guild and the presidency of the Ship Lovers Society. In 1970 she was awarded a CBE for ‘services to the community’ and ‘encouragement’ to her husband in the wartime years. She died on 24 June 1975 five months after suffering a stroke and is buried beside her husband in Karrakatta Cemetery.
Elsie’s relationship with her children seems to have remained close throughout their lives. Her daughter wrote that her parents were ‘easy going’ and her mother, who had the ‘principal upbringing of the children’, was ‘a placid cheerful person who seldom reprimanded her children’ – indeed neither of her parents had ‘believed in any physical punishment for the children.’ After her mother’s death, Elsie continued to live in the family home until it was acquired for posterity by state and federal governments to be managed by the National Trust of Australia and the university that bears Curtin’s name.

John Curtin’s first major biographer, Lloyd Ross, emphasises Elsie Curtin’s ‘refusal to pretend’ and ‘unwillingness to be diplomatic’, but he also contends that she ‘was better versed in the history and principles of the Labor Movement than were most of her critics’, a situation based on her own reading and the fact that ‘she had discussed fully and freely a range of progressive ideas with her father.’

In the words of her daughter, Elsie Curtin was ‘ideal as a partner’ for John Curtin; with her ‘even temperament’, she could act as a ‘sounding board’ for him. She handled all the family’s financial matters and at the same time had the background and interest in politics through her parents that enabled her, while shunning publicity as the Prime Minister’s wife, to play her own active role within the Labor Party and in the community. In this regard, in the days before MPs were provided with electoral staff, she had a great many calls on her time to reply to letters and to attend meetings and functions. Throughout her time as a prime ministerial wife she spent several months at a time twice a year at The Lodge and the whole of the last six months of her husband’s life. It is difficult to deny that ‘her cheerful, positive, practical outlook on life was a prefect counterbalance to her husband’s dreamy idealism, emotional volatility and acute sensitivity.’

Records on Elsie Curtin

Most records relating to Elsie Curtin are held in the National Archives of Australia (NAA) and the John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library with smaller quantities of records held elsewhere. Records in the National Archives are listed first, followed by those in the JCPML. Records held in other national and state libraries and archives and in overseas institutions are listed after the entries for the NAA and the JCPML.

RECORDS IN THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Many NAA records relating to Elsie Curtin have been digitised and are available for viewing on the National Archives’ RecordSearch database. The following records are listed chronologically as far as possible.

CORRESPONDENCE OF JOHN CURTIN AS PRIME MINISTER, GENERAL ALPHABETICAL SERIES, 1941–44

Recorded by: 1941–44 The Rt Hon. John Joseph Ambrose Curtin PC (CP 258)

1944 The Rt Hon. Francis Michael Forde PC (CP 81)

1941–44 Prime Minister’s Department (CA 12)

Quantity: 12.6 metres (Canberra)

This series comprises correspondence files maintained in the Prime Minister’s Office from October 1941, when John Curtin became Prime Minister, to December 1944. The series also reflects the extended periods in 1944 when Frank Forde was Acting Prime Minister, but does not include the correspondence for the last six months of Curtin’s term of office until his death in early July 1945.

The files mainly contain representations made directly to Curtin. The earliest of these relate to matters initially raised with Curtin as the Member of the House of Representatives (MHR) for Fremantle and then with him as Prime Minister, or matters that were passed on to him from the Fadden Government. Some letters are addressed to Mrs Elsie Curtin, to his Private Secretary, Eric Tonkin, or, in 1944, to Frank Forde.

The correspondence originated from political colleagues, personal friends, branches of political parties (particularly the ALP), trade unions, local government authorities, returned servicemen's associations, business interests, the general public, churches, women's groups and other community organisations.

The subject matter is wide-ranging and deals with requests for exemption or release from military service; pay and conditions for servicemen and their families; pensions; rationing; questions about liquor, censorship, manpower, the effect of particular National Security Regulations, requisitioned property, aliens, internees, war loans, daylight saving and pay-as-you-earn taxation; comments on the government's conduct of the war and expressions of support; American forces in Australia; the 1944 referendum; the appointment of His Royal Highness (HRH) the Duke of Gloucester as Governor-General and the re-appointment of Stanley Melbourne Bruce as High Commissioner in London; and postwar planning and so on.

The series also contains a small amount of official and more personal correspondence dealing with Curtin's travel arrangements and expressions of goodwill and concern about his health. Some policy issues are dealt with, mainly through individual cases, such as the treatment of aliens, wartime regulations, postwar reconstruction, immigration policy, housing, Indigenous Australians and appointments to official positions.

In general, replies were sent out under the signature block of Curtin's main private secretaries (Eric Tonkin and Frederick McLaughlin) or were signed directly by Curtin himself or by Forde.

In addition to letters, telegrams and handwritten notes, items in this series may also contain newspaper clippings, pamphlets, patriotic songs, poems and a few photographs. These items provide considerable insight into Curtin as Prime Minister and into Australia during the war years. Many items in this series have been digitised and can be viewed online on RecordSearch.

[Personal Papers of Prime Minister Curtin] Correspondence ‘C’, 1941–42
This item includes telegrams regarding travel arrangements for Mrs Curtin.

[Personal Papers of Prime Minister Curtin] Correspondence ‘G’, 1941–42
This item includes a poem sent to Elsie Curtin by Dame Mary Gilmore.
This series consists of 13 black-and-white photographic prints. The photographs are mostly of Prime Minister John Curtin with other political figures or at official functions, taken between 1943 and early 1945. Several images are of Curtin’s visit to Washington, London (for the Imperial Conference of Empire Prime Ministers) and Ottawa from April to June 1944. Curtin addressed a combined session of the Houses of Parliament in Ottawa. Three photographs were presentation items and have personal inscriptions from President Franklin Roosevelt of the United States of America, Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie King of Canada and the Lord Mayor of Melbourne, Frank Beaurepaire. These photographs can be viewed online on the National Archives’ PhotoSearch database.

The photograph is inscribed ‘To the Rt Hon John Curtin, MP, PC, Prime Minister of Australia and Mrs (Elsie) Curtin. With warm appreciation of their visit to the capital of Canada and with all good wishes, W L Mackenzie King, Ottawa, 31 May 1944’.

This photograph shows Mr Curtin, Mrs Curtin and General Blamey on board the Lurline before leaving Sydney for the US. A copy of this image is on p. 204.

This photograph was taken in Washington DC and shows Mrs Curtin in the background behind her husband and Cordell Hull.

CORRESPONDENCE OF JOHN CURTIN AS PRIME MINISTER, SPECIAL SUBJECT SERIES, 1941–44

Recorded by:

1941–44  The Rt Hon. John Joseph Ambrose Curtin PC (CP 258)
1944  The Rt Hon. Francis Michael Forde PC (CP 81)
1941–44  Prime Minister’s Department (CA 12)

Quantity: 1.98 metres (Canberra)

This series comprises special subject correspondence files maintained in the Prime Minister’s Office from 1942 to the end of 1944. In general the files relate to major public issues or aspects of government business. The 1944 files also reflect the increasing role of Frank Forde as Acting Prime Minister in the latter period of the Curtin Government. However, there are no files covering the last six months of Curtin’s term of office until his death in July 1945.

Most files contain representations from community groups, local government authorities, trade organisations or individuals on a particular issue – e.g. wartime restrictions on alcohol, the legalisation of the Communist Party, John (‘Jack’) Lang, racing and so on. Rather than being sent directly to Prime Minister Curtin, these letters were often forwarded to his office by the correspondent’s local member of Federal Parliament. Other files contain material relating to general government business, e.g. the Defence Act, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, invitations accepted and declined, correspondence with state premiers and so on. Many of these items contain copies of correspondence from departmental files kept by the Prime Minister’s Department. A few files cover more personal matters such as birthday and Christmas greetings, and two files (items 28 and 54) contain material relating to Mrs Elsie Curtin.

Most letters received a generic reply relating to the particular issue, which was sent out under the signature block of one of Curtin’s private secretaries, Eric Tonkin or Frederick McLaughlin. Many of the file copies of the replies are on recycled paper, a wartime austerity measure. Wartime considerations are also reflected in the date of some replies, in particular 25 December or 1 January, days which in normal circumstances would have been public holidays.

This fascinating series consists of items that, like those in M1415, provide considerable insight into John Curtin as Prime Minister and Australia during the war years. Items in this series have been digitised and can be viewed online on RecordSearch.

[Personal papers of Prime Minister Curtin] Invitations accepted [and declined by Mrs Elsie Curtin], 1941–42  M1416, 28
[Personal papers of Prime Minister Curtin] Mrs Elsie Curtin's personal file, 1941-43
This item includes letters sent and received, drafts of telegrams and a list of callers at The Lodge for December 1941. Correspondence includes appeals from women's organisations devoted to the performance of good works, to speak to meetings or rallies or to take on various offices, and letters containing offers, advice or information about austerity measures.

CORRESPONDENCE FILES, 1942–64
Recorded by: Sub-Treasury, Western Australia (CA 1008)
Quantity: 0.18 metres (Perth)
This series consists of the first general correspondence files series of the Treasury Department, Western Australian Office. The files cover both administrative and operational matters.

Parliamentary retiring allowances – Mrs Elsie Curtin – held for ‘collector interest’, 1945–52

CORRESPONDENCE OF JOSEPH CHIFLEY AS PRIME MINISTER, 1945–49
Recorded by: The Rt Hon. Joseph Benedict Chifley PC (CP 268)
Prime Minister’s Department – Prime Minister’s Office (CA 12)
Quantity: 12.6 metres (Canberra)
This series comprises correspondence files maintained in the Prime Minister’s Office when Joseph Benedict (‘Ben’) Chifley was Prime Minister. It also includes some papers relating to Chifley in his capacity as Treasurer and Acting Prime Minister during John Curtin’s final illness.

Correspondence in this series includes reports and memoranda from political colleagues and representations from individuals, unions, returned servicemen’s associations, community organisations, local government authorities and so on. The items are arranged alphabetically in eight chronological sequences. These items are digitised and can be viewed online on RecordSearch.

[Personal papers of Prime Minister Chifley] Correspondence ‘C’, part 3, 1945-46
This item includes telegrams from Frank Forde (Acting Prime Minister) to members of the Curtin family on the death of John Curtin.
SUBJECT FILES OF THE RT HON JOHN GREY GORTON AS PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER FOR DEFENCE, 1968–71

Recorded by: 1968–71 Rt Hon. Sir John Grey Gorton GCMG, AC, CH, PC (CP 136)
1968–71 Prime Minister’s Department – Prime Minister’s Office (CA 12)
1971 Department of Defence (III) (CA 46)

Quantity: 1.98 metres (Canberra)

This series consists of subject files maintained by John Gorton while he was Prime Minister (1968–71) and subsequently Minister for Defence (1971–72).

[Personal papers of Prime Minister Gorton] Correspondence with the Hon. L H E Bury (Treasurer), 1969–70

This item includes correspondence regarding pensions payable to wives (Dame Enid Lyons and Mrs Elsie Curtin) of former prime ministers.

RECORDS IN THE JOHN CURTIN PRIME MINISTERIAL LIBRARY

The John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library (JCPML) holds significant records relating to Elsie Curtin. Most of these records have been digitised and are available for viewing online through the JCPML’s Electronic Research Archive (ERA). Photographs are also available through PictureAustralia (www.pictureaustralia.org). Appendix 2   Who’s who

Francis George Anstey (1865–1940), socialist and friend and associate of John Curtin dating from early in his eight-year term (1902–10) in the Victorian Legislative Assembly. Anstey then entered federal politics representing the Victorian seat of Bourke in the House of Representatives for the Australian Labor Party (ALP) from 1910 until his retirement in 1934.

Stanley Melbourne Bruce (1883–1967) headed a Nationalist–Country Party coalition federal government from 1923 until it was defeated and he lost his own seat in Parliament in October 1929. After a short term in the House of Representatives from 1931 to 1933, he was Australian High Commissioner in London until 1945.

Arthur Augustus Calwell (1896–1973) was the Member of the House of Representatives (MHR) for Melbourne from 1940 until 1972 and leader of the Federal Parliamentary Labor Party from 1960 to 1967. He was Minister for Information in the Curtin Government from 1943 to 1945 and then Minister for Immigration in the Chifley Government from 1945 to 1949.

Richard Gavin Gardiner Casey (1890–1976) was the MHR for Corio (for the United Australia Party) from 1930 to 1931 and the MHR for La Trobe (for the Liberal Party) from 1949 to 1960 when he became a life peer as Baron Casey of Berwick. From 1965 to 1969 he was Governor-General of Australia. He was a minister in the Lyons and Menzies governments in the 1930s, including a term as Treasurer from 1935 to 1939, and again from 1949, serving as Minister for External Affairs from 1951 to 1960. Between 1924 and 1930 he was Australia’s Liaison Officer in London; from January 1940 until March 1942, he was Australian Minister to the United States (US); he then held posts with the British Government, including two years as the Governor of Bengal from 1944.

Joseph Benedict Chifley (1885–1951) served as Treasurer in the Curtin Government from 1941 to 1945, and was Prime Minister and Treasurer from July 1945 to December 1949 and then Leader of the Opposition until his death in 1951. First elected to the House of Representatives in 1928, he lost his parliamentary seat in 1931 but was returned in 1940.

Winston Spencer Churchill (1874–1965) served in the British House of Commons from 1900 until 1955 with only minor interruptions of service. He was a minister in several governments between 1906 and 1929 and then sat on the backbenches in government, and opposition until his recall to the ministry in 1939 and his elevation to Prime Minister in May 1940. His party was swept from power in 1945 but he was again Prime Minister from 1951 until his retirement in 1955.

Sir Arthur William Coles (1892–1982), one of two independents who voted to bring down the Fadden Government in October 1941, was the MHR for Henty from 1940 to 1946, following a two-year term as the Mayor of Melbourne. From 1936 to 1944 he was Managing Director of G J Coles and Company.

Philip Collier (1873–1948), the Leader of the Western Australian Parliamentary Labor Party from 1917 until his retirement in 1936, was Premier from 1924 to 1930 and from 1933 until 1936. He represented the electorate of Boulder in the Western Australian Legislative Assembly from 1905 until his death.
Dr Herbert Vere Evatt (1894–1965) left New South Wales State politics in 1930 following his appointment to the Full Bench of the High Court of Australia, only to step down from the judiciary to enter the House of Representatives in September 1940. He was Attorney-General and Minister for External Affairs in the Curtin and Chifley governments from 1941 to 1949, and Leader of the Federal Parliamentary Labor Party from 1951 until his appointment as Chief Justice of the New South Wales Supreme Court in 1960. From 1948 to 1949 he was President of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Sir Arthur William Fadden (1895–1973), Leader of the Federal Parliamentary Country Party from 1941 until 1958, was Curtin’s immediate predecessor as Prime Minister from August to October 1941. First elected to the House of Representatives in 1936, he was Federal Treasurer in the Menzies governments from 1940 to 1941 and from 1949 until his retirement in 1958.

Francis Michael Forde (1890–1983) served as Prime Minister for eight days after the death of John Curtin in July 1945. After five years in the Queensland Parliament, he sat in the House of Representatives from 1922 until 1946 and again in the Queensland Parliament from 1955 to 1957. He was Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for the Army in the Curtin Government and in the Chifley Government until he lost his seat in the 1946 election. He then became the Australian High Commissioner to Canada until 1958.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, Prince Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor (1900–74), was the third son of King George V and Queen Mary, brother of King George VI and uncle of Queen Elizabeth II. Appointed on the initiative of Prime Minister Curtin, he served as Governor-General of Australia from January 1945 until March 1947.

Lord Gowrie (1872–1955) was born Alexander Gore Arkwright Hore-Ruthven, and after distinguished service in the British Army was Governor of South Australia from 1928 to 1934 and of New South Wales from February 1935 to January 1936, when he became the Governor-General of Australia. He left Australia in September 1944, although his appointment continued until January 1945, completing a record nine-year term in the vice-regal post.

Sir Paul Meernaa Caedwalla Hasluck (1905–93) wrote the two homefront volumes for the official history of Australia during World War II. He represented the Liberal Party as member for Curtin in the House of Representatives from 1949 to 1969, during which period he served as Minister for Territories, Defence and External Affairs. From 1969 to 1974 he was the Governor-General of Australia.

William Morris (‘Billy’) Hughes (1862–1952) was Labor and then Nationalist Prime Minister from 1915 until 1923. He served seven years in the New South Wales Legislative Assembly and then over 50 years continuously in the Australian Parliament from 1901 until his death.

Francis William Hyett (1882–1919), a close personal friend of John Curtin during his Victorian socialist days, held various posts in the Victorian socialist movement and played a major role in the development of Victorian railway unions.

Herbert Victor Johnson (1899–1962) was the MHR for Kalgoorlie from 1940 until 1958, and served as Minister for the Interior in the Chifley Government from 1945 to 1949.
John (‘Jack’) Thomas Lang (1876–1975) was Premier of New South Wales from 1925 to 1927 and 1930 to 1932. He led the New South Wales Parliamentary Labor Party from 1925 and, after a party split during the Depression, the Lang Labor Party from 1932 until 1939. He later served one term (1946–49) in the House of Representatives.

Dame Enid Muriel Lyons (1897–1981), wife of Prime Minister Joseph Lyons, became the first woman MHR (for the Tasmanian electorate of Darwin) in 1943 and then the first woman in a federal ministry in December 1949. She retired from politics in 1951.

Joseph Aloysius Lyons (1879–1939), a former Labor Premier of Tasmania, entered federal politics in 1929 and served in the Scullin Ministry before leaving the ALP in March 1931 to join the United Australia Party. He was Prime Minister from January 1932 until his death in April 1939, the first Australian Prime Minister to die in office.

General Douglas MacArthur (1880–1964), after distinguished service with the US Army in World War I, became Superintendent of West Point Military Academy in 1919, was promoted to General in 1923 and appointed Chief-of-Staff of the US Army in 1930. He retired in 1937 but was recalled in June 1941 to help mobilise the Philippines Army. Following the Japanese invasion he was ordered to leave the Philippines and go to Australia and was appointed Supreme Commander of the South-West Pacific Area. In 1945 he became the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers, in which position he received the Japanese surrender and then headed the Allied occupation of Japan. In 1950 he was appointed the Commander of the United Nations Forces in Korea but was recalled in April 1951.

Tom Mann (1856–1941), a leader in the London dock strike of 1889, came to Australia in 1902 and founded the Victorian Socialist Party in 1906. He returned to the United Kingdom (UK) in 1910.

Sir Robert Gordon Menzies (1894–1978) left Victorian politics to enter the House of Representatives in 1934 and became Australia’s longest serving Prime Minister with two terms – 1939 to 1941 and 1949 until his retirement in January 1966. He had earlier served in the Lyons Government and led the Federal Parliamentary Liberal party from 1944 to 1966.

Abraham Needham (1860–1922), the father of John Curtin’s wife Elsie Needham, was born in Victoria but took his family first to South Africa in the 1890s and then to Tasmania in 1908. An active socialist thinker, he befriended Curtin during a visit by the latter to Tasmania on union business in 1912. In 1919, two years after his daughter’s marriage, Needham came with his wife to Perth and assisted Curtin with his editorial duties at the Westralian Worker until his death in August 1922.

Annie Needham, nee Hosking, (1858–1944) married Abraham Needham in 1883. She and her husband followed their daughter and son-in-law to Perth in 1919. After Abraham’s death, Annie lived with the Curtin family until her own death in 1944.

Sir Earle Christmas Grafton Page (1880–1961) entered the House of Representatives in 1919, led the Federal Parliamentary Country Party from 1921 to 1939 and was Treasurer in the Bruce–Page Government from 1923 to 1929. He served as a minister in the Lyons Government from 1934, was Prime Minister for nineteen days after the death of Lyons in April 1939, Australian minister resident in London from September 1941 until June 1942, and again a minister in the Menzies Government from 1949 to 1956.
Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1882–1945), the only man to win four successive US presidential elections, was inaugurated as President in 1933 and served continuously until his death in April 1945. He was previously Governor of New York from 1928 to 1932.

John Scaddan (1876–1934) became the youngest-ever Premier of Western Australia when elected to office in October 1911. His Labor Government remained in power until defeated on the floor of the House in July 1916. Scaddan left the party the following year over the conscription issue and, despite broken parliamentary terms, served in non-Labor governments from 1919 to 1921 and 1930 to 1933.

James Henry Scullin (1876–1953) led the Federal Parliamentary Labor Party from 1928 until 1935 and was Prime Minister from October 1929 until January 1932. He was the MHR for Corangamite from 1910 to 1913 and the MHR for Yarra from 1922 until 1949.

Dame Dorothy Margaret Tangney (1911–85) was the first woman to enter the Australian Senate when elected from Western Australia to a casual vacancy in August 1943 representing the ALP. She remained in the Senate until July 1968.

Edward John Ward (1899–1963) sat in the House of Representatives in 1931 and from 1932 to 1963 representing first the Lang Labor Party and then the ALP. He was Minister for Labour and National Service in the Curtin Government until 1943 and then Minister for Transport and External Territories in both the Curtin and Chifley governments until 1949.

Alexander Wilson (1880–1954), one of two Independents who voted to bring down the Fadden Government in October 1941, served in the House of Representatives from 1937 to 1946.

This website provides a brief illustrated history of John Curtin’s life, with links to a timeline of significant dates and a bibliography.

John Curtin: a good sport

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/sport/

Australians are known for their obsession with sport and John Curtin shared this national passion, both as a participant and as a spectator. In this web publication, images, letters, newspaper cuttings and video and audio clips combine to tell the story of the Prime Minister well regarded as ‘fairest and best’.

John Curtin: a man of peace, a time of war

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/manofpeace/

This online exhibition tells the story of John Curtin, the poor country boy who rose to become prime minister, the revolutionary young socialist-turned-political pragmatist, the pacifist called upon to lead Australia during wartime. It features key material from the original exhibition developed by the National Archives of Australia in conjunction with the JCPML. Panoramas provide a view of the exhibition in its original form.

John Curtin: a prime minister and his people

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/letters/cover.html

This selection of about 500 letters documents the relationship between Prime Minister John Curtin and the general public during the years 1941–45 and is the result of a joint project between the National Archives of Australia and the JCPML. The letters are indexed for easy access by subjects (eg, ‘censorship’, ‘Communist Party’, ‘defence’ and ‘unions’).

John Curtin: fairest and best

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/jcexhibition/

This online exhibition reflects a current display in the JCPML reading room and tells the story of Curtin’s life from his early days to his time as Prime Minister.

John Curtin: from revolutionary firebrand to journalist in spirit

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/journalist/

This online exhibition explores John Curtin’s development as a journalist and his special relationship with the media as Prime Minister. Photographs, audio clips and selections from Curtin’s own writings bring the story to life.
Investigating John Curtin: the research papers of Tom Fitzgerald

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/fitzgerald/

Tom Fitzgerald, respected economist and journalist, planned to write a biography of John Curtin but became so enmeshed in his investigations that the work was still in progress when he died in 1993. The research papers, now held by the JCPML, provide new and intriguing insights into Curtin the ‘inner man’ as well as Curtin the Prime Minister. This web publication explores the research papers and the life and work of Tom Fitzgerald.

On track: John Curtin’s railway journeys

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/railway/

This online publication explores John Curtin's lifelong link with train travel, including experiences of train travel as it was from 1917 when the Trans-Australia line first spanned the continent until the mid-1940s. Images, film clips and the memories of the people who travelled with John Curtin bring this story alive.

Shaping the nation: John Curtin and Australia

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/shapingthenation/

In following the development of John Curtin's political thinking and career, this exhibition traces the development of Australia from Federation to adulthood - to the time in World War II when Australia had to stand apart from Britain and defend its own soil. The exhibition is an exploration, through the eyes of one of Australia's most prominent early citizens, of what it means to be a nation.

Visiting John Curtin at home: 24 Jarrad St, Cottesloe

Website: john.curtin.edu.au/curtinhouse/

Houses and their furnishings can suggest a great deal about the people who inhabit them. This online publication visits John Curtin at home in his Jarrad Street house, built in 1923 and purchased by the Federal and Western Australian Governments in 1999. Photographs, video and sound help to bring to life the story of Prime Minister John Curtin’s modest home in Cottesloe.

This guide describes the archival records on John Curtin and Elsie Curtin held by the National Archives of Australia, the John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library and other institutions.

John Curtin, Australia’s Prime Minister during the darkest days of World War II, died in office within six weeks of the final victory over Japan. A Victorian by birth, he was the only Prime Minister to represent a Western Australian seat in the House of Representatives.

Professor David Black is Adjunct Professor to the Division of Humanities at Curtin University of Technology, Historical Consultant to the John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library, and Parliamentary Fellow (History) at the Parliament of Western Australia.

Lesley Wallace is Collections Librarian at the John Curtin Prime Ministerial Library.
